Then there is the question of what we ought to think about Soviet competition, buttressed by the "most sought-after currency in the world", and supported by capital at close to 3% interest, while our own producers are saddled with badly debased Federal Reserve dollars, and a double-digit interest rate structure. It bears repeating that the American producer has been taking it on the chin from German and Japanese competition ever since 1971, the last year when the dollar was as good as gold, and American interest rates lower than the German and Japanese.

It is very well to tell the Soviets that operating an economy without a well-defined monetary unit is like trying to build a house using a yard that means 36 inches to the architect, 25 to the engineer, but only 16 to the construction worker. It is very well to educate them, as Governor Angell did, by telling them that the paper ruble is like a thermometer with lines, but no numbers and no mercury. Yet education, like charity, begins at home. It would be most patriotic of Governor Angell if he could come to the Hill and testify that our paper dollar, too, was a broken thermometer having lost its mercury. Then, perhaps, we could get down to business and repair it together at the earliest opportunity.

The most serious aspect of this episode is that, in effect, Governor Angell offers the Soviets a virtual monopoly over the world's last remaining pool of loanable funds. It is incredible that he would do that without advice and consent from Congress. The pool I refer to is the world's stock of monetary gold which has been lying idle for the past twenty years. A great world resource has been condemned to idleness for want of intelligence and skills on the part of bureaucrats entrusted with its husbandry. At home, the bureaucrats are trying to cover up their incompetence by badmouthing gold as barbaric and barren. They would not use gold for what it is so superbly qualified, to wit: generating abundant domestic savings, in order to reduce interest rates to their lowest common denominator.

Before we rush to sell our birthright for a pottage of lentils while listening to chrysophobic siren songs, we should take a long, hard look at Governor Angell's proposal, laid before the Soviet hierarchy. Gold-bond financing makes for efficient government and a prosperous citizenry. Neither a capitalist nor a socialist system can do without a monetary unit of stable value. We should be the first to introduce fiscal and monetary reforms incorporating the principle of gold-bond financing of government, and beat the Soviet to the punch.

We must not handicap ourselves in this race with the Soviets by giving them a unilateral advantage in the form of gold bond financing. Let the world judge which system, capitalism or socialism, gives the people the best government and the greatest prosperity, when they are competing on a truly level playing field.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I have been an admirer of the gentleman from California for a long time because of his unsuccessful quest for gold-backed bonds. The gentleman has been working very hard on this.

As I understand it from listening to the gentleman's remarks, there is a possibility that upon recommendation from previous members of the Federal Reserve Board that the Russians might do what the gentleman has been advocating here in this country for years?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. It is amazing to hear that it could happen. This member of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Angell, an article appeared in Baron's magazine in the last couple weeks when he went to Moscow and gave the Russians advice. He said to do two things: One, back your ruble with gold, and second, issue gold-backed bonds and rubles and you will able to sell it at 3 percent interest rates. We should have done this 4 or 5 years ago.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. The gentleman is absolutely right, and I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

BUCKLEY VERSUS VALEO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, a few years ago at a black-tie dinner in Washington, Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER took the podium to address the crowd who had paid $500 a plate for the evening's meal. ROCKEFELLER had recently won a close Senate race in which he had spent a considerable amount of his personal fortune. "Some of you might feel cheated, paying 500 bucks for a lousy chicken dinner," the Senator said. "But just think about me, I spent $10 million to get here."

The Senator's self-depreciating joke illustrates one of the most troubling issues in this country. The high cost of congressional campaigns has forced incumbents to spend too much time in the constant pursuit of funds, while virtually locking out challengers without significant personal wealth.

The situation is critical: House candidates must raise $3,500 per week to have what is considered an average war chest for a legislative race. If they raise that money, and with enough dedication most Members of Congress can, the race is a walk because few challengers can match a fund that large. Due to the lack of strict spending limits, we have what amounts to an incumbent lock on our electoral process.

The U.S. Congress has attempted to address the issue of campaign reform many times. The first effort coming in 1907. Each time a law was passed, the lawyers and accountants took out their knives and carved out loopholes for their candidates. In 1974 we amended the Federal Election Campaign Act and thought we had the problem licked. The law placed strict limits on the amounts candidates could spend from their personal funds and the amounts spent by independent parties on behalf of candidates. It restricted the amount individuals and political action committees could contribute to campaigns. We had finally beaten the accountants and lawyers.

But an opponent of a different sort opposed our legislation. The Supreme Court, in a 1976 decision, ruled that the expenditure limitations restricted the freedom of speech of candidates and the third parties, although the justices upheld the constitutionality of contribution limitations. In Buckley versus Valeo, the Court held that substantial governmental interests in preventing corruption necessitated contribution limitations. Proponents of the 1974 law have argued that similar limits on expenditures would end the appearance of corruption associated with excessive expenditures by candidates and third parties. Only when the Court reimposes limits can we effectively control the influence on our elections by special interest.

During this Congress, I introduced the Campaign Expenditures Limitation Act, which calls for an expedited review of Buckley. The legislation counters the problem of runaway spending by imposing limitations on the amount a House candidate can spend from both personal and campaign funds. Candidates would be limited to total expenditures of $200,000 in the primary and general elections combined. House candidates could not spend more than $25,000 from their personal funds, and independent expenditures on behalf of a candidate would be limited to $2,500.

However, we can do nothing while Buckley exists as the strongest obstacle to significant campaign finance reform.

Noted Attorney Archibald Cox, who argued before the Court in Buckley versus Valeo, has urged a second look. Writing some 6 years after Buckley, he noted that since 1980 there has been a growing fear that money is corrupting the democratic process. It seems probable that judicial understanding might change as public comprehension of the evil increases.

Clearly, it is time for another look at Buckley. The expenditure of very large sums of money poses a grave threat to the political process. Freedom of speech, as it is guaranteed by the first amendment, should not be construed as an unlimited right to influence elections through the expenditures of money. Money doesn't talk; it shouts. It can drown out the expression of those very individual views that the first amendment is supposed to protect. Surely I think the Court, if it would look again on the basis of a congressional appeal, might be willing to take another look and change its view.

I am sorry that I disagree with the chief justice of the court—an Arizonan, incidentally—who wrote the opinion in 1976. I don't know how far we'll get in asking him to overturn his opinion, but I think we have to try; a number of legal scholars having different points of view have urged this.

A few months ago, I visited the University of Arizona library, where the papers of the Udall family are being catalogued by a professional archivist. I rummaged through a few boxes looking at photos, letters and other documents. Among my father Levi's papers was a campaign expenditure report for his successful run for the Arizona Supreme Court. The total cost for the 1946 general election $925.86 for a statewide campaign. Today, my father would be outspent 1,000 to 1.

THE AIDS CRISIS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Burton] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, back in August I took a special order of about 45 minutes to 1 hour to talk about the latest report on the AIDS pandemic and how rapidly it was spreading throughout the United States of America. I would like to real briefly give the colleagues of mine an update on the AIDs crisis.

We just called the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, GA. We have the latest update, the latest projections, and I want to bring everyone up to date. In 1983, we had 4,200 cases of people with AIDS, active AIDS, or dead or dying. In 1984 that more than doubled to 9,900 cases. By 1985 it had doubled again, more than doubled again, to 20,000 cases. By 1986, it had started to level off, by doubling every other year, and we had 35,000 cases. Through 1987, we had 48,139 cases. If it had doubled from 1987, as we had projected, we would have had 96,000 cases by the end of this year, but the fact of the matter is, according to the Centers for Disease Control, we could have as many as 129,000 cases of AIDS by the end of this year.

Our projections were based upon the current rate of the AIDS epidemic, the expanding rate of the AIDS epidemic, that we would have 250,000 people dead or dying by the end of 1991. It appears, again, that our figures are not going to be accurate. We are about 10,000 above that. In other words, instead of 250,000 dead or dying on the low side, we are going to have 260,000 dead or dying of the AIDS pandemic by 1991.

Based upon those projections, by the year 1999, 10 years from now, we are going to have at least 4 million people in this country dead or dying of AIDS, and not many people are willing to contradict those figures. In fact, many scientists believe that we are going to have more like 6 or 8 million people dead or dying by 1999.

The problem is that nobody knows for sure how bad the epidemic is. The Centers for Disease Control said 4 years ago that we had 1½ million people infected. It was doubling every year to 18 months. Today they still say we have 1½ million infected. Many scientists believe that we have more like 5 to 6 million people infected, and all of those individuals are capable of spreading this disease unknowingly to other human beings. That is why we need a comprehensive program to deal with the AIDS pandemic in this country. We need contact tracing. We need education. We need more scientific research, and we need testing. We need to test the population on a routine basis like we did for tuberculosis years ago and syphillis and other diseases to make sure this country does not suffer the consequences of a plague like they did in the 14th and 15th centuries when over half of Europe was wiped out from the bubonic plague.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that it is extremely important that this body and the other body not keep its head in the sand, its collective head in the sand, and watch these figures grow and grow and grow in an exponential manner, because we are going to rue the day we took no action. We need a comprehensive program. We need it now. The American people are in favor of it.

Mr. Speaker, the last Gallup Poll on the AIDS crisis showed that over 75 percent of the American people are in favor of a routine testing program to find out how AIDS is spreading, where it is spreading, who is spreading it, and how rapidly it is spreading. Until we get on with a comprehensive program to do just that, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have real problems in this country.

The only problem that I see with this is that the longer we wait the more innocent human beings we have condemned to death because of our inaction. If we have 5 million people infected today and that doubles every 2 years, even that means in 4 or 5 or 6 years we are going to have 15 or 20 million people infected. They are condemned to death. There is no cure for AIDS.

Most scientists agree now that if one gets the infection and carry it in their body, they can carry it for up to 20 years, and it is a death sentence.

There are all kinds of side complications, dementia, which appears to be Alzheimer's disease in many of the people who have AIDs, and that is the first thing that goes is the brain, the brain cells are affected, and there are other diseases that are opportunistic when a person's immune system starts to break down. The get diseases like tuberculosis, and if they are food handlers and working in a restaurant and their immune system breaks down and they get tuberculosis, the people who eat in that establishment are at risk.

There are a lot of things that we do not know about that we need to know about. The only way we are going to get to the bottom of it is, Mr. Speaker, by a comprehensive program to deal with it.

Tonight I want to tell my colleagues real briefly about a problem that is going to face us immediately regarding the AIDS crisis and related issues. There is a bill pending before the Congress called the antidiscrimination legislation, and there is an article that was written not long ago by a man named Mr. Gene Antonio, who is an expert on the AIDS crisis who deals with this. I want to read real quickly this article into the RECORD, because I think everybody in the Congress and in the country ought to know about what we are up against: "Since the AIDS epidemic has seriously eroded public sympathy for the gay-rights agenda, homosexual lobbyists are busy pursuing a back-door approach through legislation. A bill apparently aimed at prohibiting discrimination against the disabled in hiring and public accommodations would also apply to AIDS-infected people and even to Members of high-risk groups, that is, homosexual.

" 'We demand that the Federal Government amend all Federal civil rights acts, other legislation and government controls to prohibit discrimination in employment, housing, public accommodations and public services.' "

That is a quote from the national gay rights platform. And this is a section from pending legislation before this body and the other body: "Private employers and privately operated establishments used by the general public as customers, clients or visitors, including restaurants and private schools, may not discriminate against individuals being regarded as having a physical or mental impairment." That is a quote from the Americans with Disabilities Act, commonly known as H.R. 2273 or Senate bill 933.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will listen to this. It is very important. In Louisiana a hospital which terminated a male nurse with AIDS and hepatitis, who had bleeding skin sores, faced a massive lawsuit for its alleged "discrimination." After an expensive legal battle, the nurse with the AIDS virus remains working in close contacts with patients at another hospital. In New York, a century-old private dental clinic, over 100 years old, for the poor had to close its doors after being forced to pay a $50,000 fine imposed by the city's human rights commission. In an attempt to protect other patients, the clinic had referred two AIDS carriers who had bleeding oral lesions for treatment elsewhere. They had active AIDS with lesions in their mouths, and because they referred them elsewhere, they were fined $50,000, and they were trying to protect their other clients.

In New London, WI, a private rehabilitation center for troubled teenage boys was compelled by the State to sign a statement pledging to hire avowed homosexuals as counselors or have the youth forcibly removed from the center within 48 hours.

"All churches who condemn us will be closed," and this is a quote from the Homoerotic Order, the Gay Community News. In St. Paul, MN, a Roman Catholic priest, who is principal of parochial school, faced several months in jail for the crime for choosing not to hire a practicing homosexual with a record of pedophilia to teach young boys.

Item: "The Big Brothers' organization in Minneapolis was ordered by the city's human rights commission to place recruitment ads," get that, recruitment ads, "in homosexual tabloids in San Francisco in order to atone for their past fault of not hiring avowed homosexuals as the role models for fatherless boys." Can you believe that? "The organization was prohibited from telling mothers of the boys of the prospective big brothers' sexual preference. After a tough court battle, the Big Brothers of Minneapolis presently have permission to tell parents of an applicant's admitted sexual preference." They can at least do that after a lengthy court battle.

Item: "Nursing homes in many States are being compelled to take AIDS patients. 'antidiscrimination' guidelines prohibit the staff from being informed." One cannot even tell the staff that the person has AIDS, yet they are taking care of them. "Guidelines prohibit the staff from being informed which patients have AIDS or from housing them in separate rooms." In other words, you have to put the AIDS patient in the room with the people who do not have AIDS, and the people taking care of them, the nurses and health-care officials, cannot even be told the person has AIDS. "As a result, according to Dixie Snider, director of T.B. surveillance at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, pulmonary tuberculosis, a frequent complication of AIDS, is breaking out among staff, patients and visitors."

In New Jersey, a private landlord who refused to rent an apartment to three overt homosexuals received criminal and civil penalties. Although it was not determined if they carried AIDS, a Superior Court ruled homosexuals are entitled to special status as members of a group "perceived as being handicapped" because of their high risk of acquiring AIDS (228 N.J. Super. 370).

As onerous as these state and local cases are, they pale in comparison to the appalling consequences of a pending national AIDS carrier/homosexual special rights bill.

The Chilling Implications of the "Americans with Disabilities Act" (S. 933/H.R. 2273).

Homosexual lobbyists, AIDS activists, and their Congressional allies in Washington, D.C., realize that a Federal law which directly prohibits discrimination based on "sexual orientation" or "HIV infection" would be unpalatable to the majority of Americans and unlikely to pass. Instead, they have devised a masterpiece of legislative subterfuge which would effectively achieve their goals without using terms which raise a red flag in the minds of the public.

Under the cloak of the benign, Affecting title, "The Americans with Disabilities Act" (ADA), homosexual attorneys have helped to draft a bill which would impose massive fines and other coercive legal measures on all private employers, churches, and private schools who decline to hire an individual with a "physical or mental impairment, a record of such impairment, or who is being regarded as having such an impairment."

The critical question is: What sort of "impairments" would be covered by this bill? According to regulations issued under the auspices of the Federal Rehabilitation Act of 1973, these terms have been interpreted to include:

(a) "a physiological disorder or condition, cosmetic disfigurement [scar, mole, etc.], or anatomical loss that affects one or more of the following body systems: neurological, musculoskeletal, special sense organs [eyes, ears], respiratory, including speech organs, cardiovascular, reproductive [including transsexuals who have been voluntarily castrated] . . . or

(b) a mental or psychological disorder, including mental retardation, organic brain syndrome [including various types of dementia, such as Alzheimer's disease or AIDS encephalitis], emotional or mental illness, [including schizophreniz, paranoia, psychoses] and specific learning disabilities."

At present, only Federal agencies and government contractors are required to hire employees with these conditions.

Other private employers have been excluded from doing so because the law requires "reasonable accommodation," an expense which would prove ruinous to many, if not most, small and medium-sized employers.

The "Americans with Disabilities Act," however, defines the term "employer" to mean:

"a person engaged in an industry affecting commerce who has 15 or more employees * * * and any agent of such person."

In addition, the Act broadly defines "public accommodations and services operated by private entities" as including all: "privately operated establishments that are used by the general public as customers, clients, or visitors; or that are potential places of employment, and whose operations affect commerce.

"Public accommodations include auditoriums, convention centers, restaurants, shopping centers, inns, hotels, motels * * * professional offices of health care providers, office buildings, sales establishment, personal and public service businesses, parks, private schools, and recreation facilities.

These provisions encompass virtually every private employer (including nonprofit religious organizations) and self-employed persons in the United States.

WHY THE ADA IS DANGEROUS POLICY

(1) The ADA would force private employers to hire carriers of communicable diseases, drug addicts, and alcoholics.

The ADA contains a provision which seemingly excludes persons with diseases which pose a "direct threat" in the workplace or who currently abuse alcohol or illegal drugs. However, a leaked letter, dated April 11th, between high officials of the Department of Health and Human Services and the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) notes approvingly that, in reality, the ADA definition of disability does include:

"* * * contagious or infectious diseases (including AIDS or HIV infection), drug addiction, and alcohol abuse.

"We believe this is the correct approach, both as a matter of public health policy and as a matter of civil rights law." [cf., The New American, "A Fatal Blow to Private Education?"

At the recent International AIDS Conference held in Montreal, the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health and Human Services, U.S. Public Health Services gave a presentation entitled "State/Local Strategies to Prevent and Resolve HIV-Related Discrimination." Their report derides concerns about AIDS in the workplace as stemming from "fear or ignorance." "Advocacy strategies" for AIDS carriers are "timely" and should provide technical assistance for informing employers of their "obligations" under law.

The Federal Office of Personnel Management has warned that its employees objecting or declining to work alongside infectious AIDS carriers will be subject to disciplinary action.

Think about that. If you are working alongside, a person who has open lesions on their body, who is coughing and spitting because their immune system is breaking down, and they are just about ready to go in the hospital, if you complain about that you are subject to disciplinary action and you cannot leave the workplace, even though you feel your health is jeopardized.

The OPM sets personnel policies for the government's three million civilian employees (military not included).

If the ADA is passed, restaurant owners will be subject to legal action and massive fines fo each day they continue refusing to hire or attempting to fire a food handler with AIDS, hepatitis B, or any other communicable diseases which federal bureaucrats and public health administrators determine do not pose a "direct threat."

Can Members imagine what, if they own a restaurant and somebody has hepatitis B or AIDS, you cannot fire them without being subject to penalties.

Hospitals, medical and dental offices would be forbidden from denying employment to AIDS carriers and individuals with other communicable diseases even if they would be involved in bloody surgical procedures involving sharp instruments or working in close physical contact with patients.

One of the ways you communicate AIDS is by blood getting into someone else's bloodstream, and if you are working in a surgical procedure and someone has AIDS, the patient is at risk. Yet, if this legislation passes, you cannot do anything about it. That is in its present form. Hopefully we will be able to clean this mess up.

Under the ADA, railroads, shipping, trucking, and bus companies would be denied the right to decline employment to individuals with a "record of alcohol or drug abuse" if they are "currently" not abusing these substances.

The recent Exxon Valdez oil spill incident involving a ship captain with a record of repeated alcohol abuse is a pertinent example of the catastrophic consequences of this type of policy. Unless individuals like the Valdez captain were currently abusing alcohol or narcotics, and employer would be forced to disregard his "record of such impairment".

Precisely how long would the captain of a ship, a train engineer, truck, or bus driver have to remain unintoxicated before an employer would be forced to hire or rehire him?

Would remaining sober for a few months or weeks or days re-qualify him? How soon after a major accident involving drug or alcohol "impairment" would a company be compelled to let these drivers loose on the hapless environment and general public? These critical questions are left completely open-ended for federal bureaucrats and the courts to determine.

(2) The ADA would force employers to hire individuals with dangerous psychiatric conditions such as paranoid schizophrenia, psychotic disturbances, and dementia. Psychotics and demented individuals would be brought under the specially protected category of being "mentally impaired" for as long as government officials or the courts determine they are able to perform the "essential" duties of an occupation with "reasonable accommodation" for their mental disorders and/or brain deterioration.

Every employer in the nation would be mandated under Federal law to make "reasonable accommodation" for individuals with "a mental or psychological disorder—organic brain syndrome—emotional or mental illness."

The ADA defines "reasonable accommodation" to include:

"Job restructuring, part-time or modified work schedules—adjustment or modifications of examinations and training materials, adoption or modification of procedures or protocols, the provision of qualified readers or interpreters, and other similar accommodations."

Hospitals, law enforcement agencies, day care centers, churches, public and private schools would all be forced to hire or retain dementia patients and the mentally unbalanced. The burden of coping with employees who can't cope with their emotions would rest on private employers.

If employees become too anxious or depressed to work for days at a time, or become fretful or forgetful during the course of a workday, it would be incumbent upon employers to rearrange their work schedules, "modify procedures," and provide qualified substitutes to step in whenever the mentally "ill" employees feel unable to continue working."

□ 1800

This will play havoc with the free enterprise system and private employers.

Occupational exams which tend to weed out applicants with mental disorders (used by law enforcement agencies and others) would have to be "modified" so they did not "discriminate" against individuals with psychological "impairments."

(3) The ADA would make criminals out of private employers who refuse to hire practicing sex deviants and the sodomy partners of AIDS carriers. In some metropolitan areas, more than half of practicing homosexuals are already infected with the AIDS virus.

In some parts of the country, in some major cities it is as high as 70 percent.

Under the ADA, homosexuals per se would be awarded special status because their deviant conduct places them in a class "regarded as being disabled." The ADA also has a subtly worded clause which makes it illegal to "discriminate":

"Against an individual or entity because of the relationship to, or association of, that individual or entity with another individual with a disability."

This would apply to homosexual employees who "come out of the closet" and reveal that a past or present "lover" or "associate" has AIDS.

The ADA also provides that any individual "who believes that he or she is being or about to be subject to discrimination on the basis of disability" is entitled to begin legal proceedings against the alleged potential violator whether or not an act of "discrimination" has actually occurred.

This is going to cause all kinds of legal problems for private employers. The cost and the clogging-up of the judicial system is going to be unbelievable if this happens.

THE ADA MUST BE STOPPED

The ADA is the last ditch attempt of the remorseless sodomy lobby to achieve its national agenda before the impending decimation of AIDS destroys its political clout. Their Bill simply must be stopped. There will be no second chance for normal America if the ADA is passed. The massive lawsuits that will be filed, the restraining orders and astronomical fines imposed will effectively quash any employer which attempts to resist compliance.

This Bill is on a super fast track and will become law unless there is a massive public outcry immediately.

Then he tells about what can be done by contacting your Congressman or your Senator.

Let me just say that we all want to make sure that there is no discrimination in the work place. We want to make sure that people are not unfairly treated and lose their jobs because of discrimination.

We must also at the same time realize that we have health concerns in this country. We have a pandemic which is spreading at a rapid rate. Nobody knows how rapidly.

Most people with whom I have talked believe we have 5 million people infected with AIDS. We already have something like 29,000 or 30,000 people that are going to be dead or dying from AIDS by the end of this year into 1990.

When you extrapolate that out, we are going to have approximately 4 million-plus people dead or dying by the year 1999.

Now we need to make sure that when we pass legislation regarding this antidiscrimination that we are not going to allow people who can communicate infectious diseases working in jobs that will endanger other people in this country. The American people deserve the best quality of life that we can give them. We are not going to insure that if we allow people who have tuberculosis, AIDS, hepatitis-B, working in places where they can communicate that disease by being food handlers or other things.

That is why this legislation needs to be scrutinized very, very closely.

I ask my colleagues tonight to really look at this bill, that is the American With Disabilities Act, H.R. 2273, and Senate bill 933—it has already passed the Senate—and work with us to amend this bill so that we can make it workable and really do what the bill is intended to do and that is to protect people against discrimination, not to protect people who have a disease and who may spread it through the community or throughout the country.

In addition, let me end up by just saying this—and I appreciate my colleagues for being so tolerant and waiting on me here—we need to get on with a comprehensive program to deal with the AIDS pandemic. The longer we wait, the more Americans are going to be condemned to die.

So all of us in this body and in the other body need to pay attention to what is going on. Listen to the statistical data out of the Centers for Disease Control.

We are 10,000 ahead of what we thought we would be at this point a year ago. It is more than doubling every 2 years. If it keeps on in that manner, we are going to have a big problem.

So, colleagues of mine, pay attention, let us get on with the job of coming up with a program to deal with this.

UPDATE ON NICARAGUA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLEMENT). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, we have taken out this special order this afternoon to focus attention on a very important issue, one that is near and dear to a great many people who have throughout this entire decade been in the middle of the struggle for freedom in Central America.

In July of 1979, when the Sandinistas overthrew the horrible, repressive dictatorship of Anastasio Somoza, four basic things were promised to the people of Nicaragua. They were promised free and fair elections, an end to human rights violations, a nonaligned foreign policy and political plurality.

Those commitments were not only made to the people of Nicaragua, Mr. Speaker, but also to the Organization of American States and a wide range of other international organizations.

We know that throughout this decade clearly all four of those commitments have been violated. We have all been supporting the bipartisan attempt, supporting the four democratically elected presidents of Central America, Cerezo, Azcona, Arias, and now Cristiani, and the effort that Daniel Ortega put together in Tella the first weekend of August.

Well, since that time there have been a number of delegations which have been put together, Members of Congress, going on weekends for that 4-hour flight into one of the, frankly, worst hell holes in this hemisphere, an area which used to be a great honeymoon capital of the world, Managua, Nicaragua, which is now tragically a hell hole because it deteriorated so throughout this period of the 1980's under a Communist totalitarian regime.

Mr. Speaker, I was very privileged to be a part, this past weekend, of an important delegation. Now it was not important because I was along; it was important because of its leadership and its other members.

A new Member of Congress who has come up here, succeeded our colleague in the House, CONNIE MACK, who now serves so ably in the Senate, PORTER GOSS is following CONNIE MACK's tradition of serving on the Committee on Foreign Affairs and he very ably led this delegation on this trip to Central America.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report to you, as he was your representative down there, that he did a superb job in representing the U.S. Government.

We had some experiences which we would like to share with our colleagues over the next few minutes.

Also along on that trip we had the dynamic duo from North Carolina, Mr. HOWARD COBLE and CASS BALLENGER. Maybe when I said "dynamic duo from North Carolina," I should be referring simply to the BALLENGER'S because CASS, his bride Donna, we have learned to call her Dona, over the last decade and a half, really 17 years as our friend Mr. BALLENGER has told us, spent a great deal of time and effort struggling to provide humanitarian assistance to those throughout Central America who are seeking help and struggling in that cause for freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the four of us who did represent the United States in observing the developments which took place this weekend, as yesterday was the first, the first of four Sunday's during which Nicaraguans will be registering to vote for that election which we are hoping will be free and fair next February 25.

Our delegation went, and we spent a great deal of time. Rather than my getting into an explanation, Mr. Speaker, because I have a lot of war stories that I could provide about this, I would like to yield briefly to the chairman of our delegation, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss], who led the delegation so ably.

I would like to have a couple of remarks from him, and then we know time constraints are great around this place, and we, of course, want to move right ahead with the North Carolina "dynamic duo," as they have a busy schedule, and the gentleman who kept Members here, from Indiana [Mr. BURTON], will be saved for last.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding, and thank him especially for his very kind remarks. In fact, I am indebted not only to the gentlemen from California [Mr. DREIER], but to the gentlemen from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE] and [Mr. BALLENGER] for taking a freshman and helping him find a way in participating in what I think was an excellent team effort.

We actually did get a great deal accomplished. The record will show that. More importantly, we got things accomplished for the people of Nicaragua and for all other people in the world looking for free and democratic elections in that country.

This is not going to be an easy chore. However, I think we have helped make it possible. Certainly, there were three things that we learned, that we think are heartened by this 48-hour period that we spent there. The first is that the democratic opposition has really gotten their act together, operating as the United Democratic Coalition, under the name UNO. We have gotten a disparate group of politicians with many different political philosophies, but the common denominator of democratic free elections is what they are looking for. They basically have got their effort together. They are enthusiastic. We met with the leadership. We met with many members of their party. They are clearly interested in making this happen. What is more important, based on the report we received, are the people coming out to support them, even in the rain, as this is the rainy season in Nicaragua, and people did come out in the thousands to encourage them and cheer them on at the rallies, as they went around the country.

I think that we can say that the democratic opposition is readly for this campaign, to the best of their ability at this time. Even though they lack sustenance, they lack support for the dollar-type items that they are going to need, their spirit is strong, their morale is good, and they have their team together.

The second thing I think we learned is there really is a possibility that we could have free and fair elections in Nicaragua this year, and in carrying out the election will actually be in February 1990, but in fact, if the registration process that is going on this year is not properly completed, this may not happen.

Mr. DREIER of California. If the gentleman would yield on that point, I think it is important for Members to underscore, since he mentioned the issue of registration, that the prospect of the election is actually taking place in large part right now. In fact, there was a column that was written by Georgie Anne Geyer not too long ago in which she underscored—I guess last week or possibly the week before—she underscored the fact that really, the process is taking place during the month of October, and those four Sundays during which we are seeing registration take place.

Many people think the election is February 25, and that is right and we should all focus on that, but because of the complexity of that process, it is now during those four Sundays which started just yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has underscored that point extremely well. We are 25 percent of the way through the opportunity, at this point, we learned that we are not on an even playing field, and that is the third point I wanted to make.

While it is clear we have the opportunity, it is also very clear that we are on a very uneven playing field. The Government of Nicaragua and the Sandinista party are virtually one and the same. Therefore, the Sandinista party controls most all of the mechanism logistics in the country. I know that my colleagues from North Carolina are certainly going to address their observations.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should jump to the North Carolina colleagues. I know my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER], who spent the past 37 years of his life with his bride, Dona Donna, but 17 of those years have been spent struggling on behalf of the people of Central America, providing a wide range of things from radio transmitters to hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, it is a special privilege to have been along with him on this trip, and I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER].

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from California for yielding, and also my friend from Florida, and would like to say thank you for the flattering words, and I am happy that I have been involved in Central America for 17 years, and involved in the many trips I have taken to Nicaragua, and for the opportunity. Always before there has been a black cloud, it seems, flying over that place. The government not only ignored people, but they ignored their people, and now I think because of world opinion, they think they have to have an election. Whether it will turn out to be fair and honest, is something we will have to observe.

The reality is, they will have to have an election. It would be almost impossible to stop now. There are two things, I think, to me that are very important. First of all, as the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss] said, the inability of new UNO, our democrat party, to develop any kind of advertising. I think I mentioned it earlier on the news broadcast that we had, about every 50 yards in the city of Managua, every time we went 50 yards in any direction, there was a Sandinista sign, a Sandinista poster, Sandinistas everywhere. I did not see a single UNO sign all day long when we traveled around. I think it is basically they have no money to spend. They have no income. I hope somewhere, somehow, and soon, people in this country will help them.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, if I could reclaim my time, it is apparent that the Sandinista, too, are spending their government funds with influx of capital from the Soviet Union and Libya, clearly on campaigning. We often have the argument about the power of incumbency around here, but if we were involved with the kind of excessive abuse of power the way the Sandinistas had geared toward reelection, we would immediately be thrown out.

Mr. BALLENGER. If the gentleman will continue yielding, the one thing I noticed as we went down, there was a newspaper article by the Associated Press in this country, talking about the fabulous division that has developed in the operation of UNO.

As the gentlemen know, we ate breakfast with all of the organization, and there was one man whose feelings were deeply hurt because he was not chosen to be vice president, and his organization was coming around. They, in fact, supported Mrs. Chamorro at a rally they had the next day, and 250 of them met together and picked out a ticket of 90 people to run for congress.

Now, if you can imagine 250 politicians getting together to pick out a ticket of 90, and one person got mad and walked out, and AP reported that the whole thing had a great division. It is unbelievable to me we can report that way.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman is absolutely right, and it was a Mr. HOWARD who, when we were at dinner Saturday evening, made it very clear if a political party in the United States were to put together an alliance of 14 parties with a wide range of views, a wide range of philosophies, it really could not be done. The reason that we have seen this 14-party alliance is very simple and clear, as the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. HOWARD COBLE has pointed out, and that is the fact that they are all, regardless of their view, standing up and trying to oppose the Communist totalitarian Marxism-Leninism regime which has seized power and controlled the country and obliterated it throughout the 1980's.

Mr. BALLENGER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, one more thing I would like to add, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss] mentioned it earlier, about the fact that the television stations are owned and operated by the government there, and that at the convention where the Sandinistas nominated Daniel Ortega, they had 12 hours of continuous coverage on television in that country. The UNO operation is allowed 20 minutes a week. That shows the difficulty they are facing in the future.

I would like to say I hope all Members will get together and somehow support this whole situation.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and I think it is important for Members to point out, we do not in any way want to tamper with the internal politics of another country, but that is why this rather delicate but clear choice stands before the U.S. Congress and this administration. The choice is: Do we want to support the cause of democracy, freedom, free and fair elections, moving in that direction? Or do we want to, by standing by and doing absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker, allow this regime of Daniel Ortega to continue to maintain power? To me it is a very clear choice.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his fine contribution, and it was an honor to be with him. I hope very much, Mr. Speaker, he will extend my remarks to Dona Donna, and we look forward to hearing from the other half of the North Carolina dynamic duo, who joined Members on this trip, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE].

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER]. I appreciate his having taken out this special order.

As the gentleman pointed out previously, it was indeed a meaningful and productive weekend. I am going to depart just a minute from what I planned to do because of something else the gentleman said.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] said earlier that in the old days Managua was recognized as an outstanding city worldwide. Now the gentleman from California is too young to remember this, and the gentleman from Florida may be too young to remember it; my friends from North Carolina and Indiana clearly are not too young. They do not fall into this category, but our Speaker pro tempore [Mr. CLEMENT] earlier mentioned about country music week, and I am a long-time country music fan. By the same token, I have always enjoyed hearing the music of the Andrews Sisters, and here is why I say that the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is too young for this.

Mr. Speaker, the Andrews Sisters enjoyed tremendous popularity during the World War II years and the years following that war, and one of their hit songs was entitled, "Managua, Nicaragua."

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I have heard the song.

Mr. COBLE. But bear with me.

Mr. DREIER of California. It was on the Night Line program.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I think I am going to say the words of the chorus as best I remember them.

Managua, Nicaragua, what a beautiful town;
You buy a hacienda for a few pesos down;
You give it to the lady you're trying to win;
But her poppa doesn't let you come in.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] that, as we rode through Managua this week, what was downtown Managua prior to the earthquake, the lyrics of that song haunted me because Managua, Nicaragua, is indeed no longer a beautiful town. It has deteriorated very badly, as the gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. Speaker, I want to put a different spin on this, if I may. Unlike many people in this body, as to this issue I have always seen a lot of gray. Most of our colleagues see this Contra, Sandinista, Nicaraguan matter as all black or all white, and that may well be correct, but through my eyes there is a lot of gray.

Now each time, as my colleagues know, that we have had an occasion to vote for aid to the Contras, as it has popularly been called, aid to the freedom fighters, on each occasion I have voted in favor of that aid, but many times it has been a battle with me because, as I said, I see atrocities, for example, dispensed by both of these warring parties.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, if I could reclaim my time, I wish the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE] would share with the Speaker and our colleagues the conversation that he had with President Ronald Reagan about this particular issue.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], and I will do that.

The President brought many of us down who were uncertain, but I think that was the first vote; $14 million, I think was the package then—I think it was $14 million, and it finally was increased in excess of $25 million, and I told him, I said:

Mr. President, I'm not anxious about giving $14 million away to anybody. As you know, I'm pretty tight with my collars and the taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I go along with that.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] chiming in, but I said, "I'm especially not anxious about giving money away to people who might not be deserving," and I said in many instances and many times in this Nicaraguan situation, and I said to him at the White House:

I don't view it as good guys versus bad guys. I view it many times as bad guys versus bad guys.

But I said to him:

There is a distinction between the two groups of guys. One happens to espouse and encourage Marxist revolutionary tactics while the other, espouses freedom and democracy.

Mr. Speaker, given that choice of an up or down vote, each time I opted for freedom and democracy even though I had some doubts that lingered in my mind. Some of those doubts, I think, were assuaged this week.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues know the old saying that a picture is worth a thousand words, and I say to them, "You must go and see it."

As I said to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] this weekend, I am not a member of the congressional frequent flyer club. I do not take many trips. In fact, this is only the second trip I have taken in 5 years, the second congressional delegation trip. I almost did not take it. Last week I almost concelled because I was not convinced it would serve a good purpose.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE], full well knows that it would have been a horrible loss to my colleagues, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss], and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is indeed very kind, and I appreciate that, but I am glad I went.

One reason I did go is that I knew much work had been done to prepare for this prior by the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER]. I told the Secretary of State's office that as a result of the leter that he distributed some days ago expressing an interest in Members of Congress going to Nicaragua prior to the end of this year that I would do so primarily because of that letter. I felt he wanted some of us in a bipartisan way, Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives, to go over and look it over.

We did that, and I am glad we did it, and I will show for our viewers a picture of our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], along with Comandante Borge who is the minister of the interior in Nicaragua. He is pictured to Mr. DREIER's left, and I think that is logically appropriate. They posed during a tour that the comandante conducted for us in two of the what? Four of five prisons they maintain there?

Mr. DREIER of California. Four prisons, right, within Managua there——

Mr. COBLE. Within the Managua area, and we visited two of them.

Mr. DREIER of California. There are a total of 11 political prisons.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, he asked, as the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] will recall, him to accompany him into the cell behind the closed barred door, and that cell is where he told us that he spent, I think, 2 years in solitary confinement when the Somoza regime imprisoned him there.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE], is absolutely right. It was rather ironic that we were all in that cell with him, but I noticed that I was the last one he let out of the cell, and he insisted that the two of us stay in there for a while, but it was a very tragic situation to see the prisons, which truly are political prisons, in Nicaragua.

As my colleagues know, there are many people who believe that it is like a country club. Well, it is apparent to us from our visit that they were ready for us, and they had cleaned those places out. We could smell the Pinesol, or disinfectant, or whatever they use for that sort of thing, and it was odvious that we were used in this tour.

We know; our colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GRANT], a friend of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], along with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER], and I know a number of our colleagues were on that delegation about 3 weeks ago and met with Daniel Ortega, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GRANT], specifically asked that a tour be set up of prisons. So, there was about a 3-week notice time that they had, and I think that it is a very important thing for us to take into consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get into that in just a few moments, but I know my friend from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE], has important points to make, and then we will get into a discussion about the prison situation and report to our colleagues as we saw it.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER of California. I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE].

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share this particular story because I think this will be of interest to our viewers, as well as our colleagues, who may be watching.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE], my friend, that it is against House rules to refer to the viewers. I know that the SPEAKER pro tempore is probably squirming right behind me, but I know this from experience.

Mr. COBLE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLEMENT] is ignoring me, and I will refrain from doing that. He is in conversation with another person.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about you, but we are doing so favorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore Mr. CLEMENT). Thank you.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, during the first visit of our first two prison stops the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER], and I were 2 or 3 feet from the commandante, and we saw two prisoners who were off to the side.

Now, that Saturday was allegedly visitors day, family day, and most of the people were gathered in a common area with their families, but these two men were off to themselves. I think it was the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] who initiated this conversation and began talking to them. I think the gentleman asked how long they had been in.

It was I, I believe, who asked what their crimes were, and they were political crimes. They were political prisoners. And that has been one of the issues here.

Mr. DREIER of California. They were charged, as I recall, with having assisted the Contras, so they were labeled counterrevolutionaries. In fact, on the back of that first page there are pictures of them right on the bottom there.

Mr. COBLE. Yes, they were counterrevolutionaries, and obviously political prisoners. That has been an issue that has plagued this Nicaraguan problem from day one, whether or not political prisoners were still in prison. Some have said, oh, indeed not; others have said that there are far many more in prison now than was the case under Somoza, and I am inclined to lean in that direction; but in any event, it was the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], who said to the commandante, "Can you release these men?" I think one had served—what, 4 years of a 7-year sentence, and I am just going from memory now.

Mr. DREIER of California. Yes, right.

Mr. COBLE. And I think the other served perhaps 3 years of a 5-year sentence, and the commandante in his inimitable style brushed his hand skyward and said, "Why, yes, I certainly will get these men released. I will recommend it immediately."

The next day in the Managua newspaper, the El Nuevo Diario reported the fact that the commandante did say he would recommend their immediate release.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman has got it right there.

Mr. COBLE. The question I ask is if this can be done so summarily, if the commandante at our request can say, "Why sure, let's let these guys out," perhaps they should not have been in to begin with.

Mr. DREIER of California. Good point.

Mr. COBLE. I will never forget the expressions on their faces, because they were expressionless. There was no change of expression, the gentleman will recall. If that had been I, I would have been in ecstasy, or perhaps if you did not believe it, you would be scoffing and say, "Oh you're yanking my chain. You don't mean this."

Mr. DREIER of California. Would the gentleman care to report that when we left those two men standing, we walked around and what we saw upon our return, and I will be happy to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. COBLE. Well, it was about an hour later subsequent to that, and I thank the gentleman for reminding me of that, that we returned. We retraced our steps along the same course and these two men were still standing there alone, almost in the precise location where we had left them. They had not moved. They were still alone. Their faces were still bearing the same expressionless glance that was there when we departed.

Mr. DREIER of California. So reclaiming my time, one could only infer from what we saw that those individuals had specifically been paraded out for our particular meeting, and then they were told basically what they probably could have heard on several other trips when America's Watch and other groups had gone in to look at the prison system there.

Mr. COBLE. That may or may not be accurate. One thing that I do attach some significance to, however, is that they were listed by their names in the paper and the commandante was quoted as saying he would recommend their release. I hope that happens.

If the gentleman from California will allow me just a couple more minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. I am happy to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. COBLE. Then I will wind down and listen to the rest of you.

I think what I learned, it was not mentioned, but we did stop in El Salvador en route to Nicaragua. What I learned from my trip this week is that there is tremendous potential in those five Central American countries. The soil is unbelievably rich.

I am thinking, I say to the gentleman from California, that one day that region of the world may reclaim some of the proud past that the gentleman mentioned earlier that the lyrics of the Andrew sisters' song clearly reveal for these states.

Mr. DREIER of California. If I can reclaim my time on that particular point, I think it is important for us to underscore that parts of Central American already are, because for the first time in literally decades we have seen free and fair elections held in Guatemala, Honduras, and then on March 19 in El Salvador, and this June 1 we saw the transition from one democratically elected government to another for the first time in the history of El Salvador, and as the gentleman knows from the report that we got, it is going to be years before El Salvador can recover after it deals with the problem of the thrust of the Farabundo Marti, the FMLN in El Salvador; but there are already signs of improvement demonstrating that movement in the direction of the democratic process of free and fair elections with representative government has had a salutary effect on parts of Central America; but the stark contrast between El Salvador and Nicaragua, I remember when Mrs. Ballenger in the car made that statement to us as we went, "San Salvador—Managua" on Friday. It was very clear the difference where a fledgling democracy is and a Communist totalitarian regime is, and it is very stark.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, that is indeed true and I think that if the country with the largest standing army in the region, Nicaragua, could be governed by a party that espouses and encourages democracy and freedom, rather than encourages exporting its revolution beyond its borders to its neighbors, I think those neighbors would benefit directly. I think the United States of America would benefit directly, because it could very well solve some of our immigration problems. Many of the people from that region no doubt would return home, particularly if investors decided, well, let us establish this plant or this factory here in Costa Rica or in Guatemala or El Salvador or Nicaragua or Honduras. There is a labor market there, particularly untrained labor, which is ready, willing, and able to make it happen. That is why the election is so important. That is why it is so important that this election be conducted equitably and fairly and openly.

Mr. Speaker, I very much enjoyed being with these gentlemen all this past weekend. I think it was a productive weekend and I look forward to seeing what develops during the next three Sundays.

You know, we mentioned the possibility of extending that deadline for registration. I have no idea whether that will be done, but I hope that it will be a good, clean, fair election, and they can move onward and upward.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his very fine and able contribution. It was great to be traveling with the gentleman to the region.

The blue ink on my thumb which I dipped into one of the spots where the registration was taking place yesterday is starting to rub off, but in light of the fact that it is rubbing off, before it is competely gone, I would like to ask my friend, the gentleman from Florida, the very distinguished leader of our delegation, the chairman of our delegation, to explain to our colleagues the process of registration. I know that the gentleman has a publication which he wants to show which outlines it. I would like to call on the gentleman at this point to discuss that, if he would, and I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend, the gentleman from California, for the opportunity to share with our colleagues a little something about the registration process. I think the fact that the process is happening is good news. There are clearly some problems that we have to be on guard for and watch out for, because in Nicaragua there is no census. Nobody really knows how many people there are in Nicaragua or how many voters there are who are eligible to vote. They have somewhat of a more primative identification system than many of the other countries where democratic elections are held, so consequently there is an important registration process.

When we have had these debates, as we are having ongoing now in democratic government institutions, such as in this House, about whether or not it is worthwhile contributing dollars in support to the process of democratic elections, I have got here an 8-page document which explains in very basic language, using cartoons and pictures, so that virtually anybody, even somebody who perhaps was not terribly well-educated, gets an idea of what is required. This is an excellent effort, and this document was put out by the Electoral Council in Nicaragua, but it is important to note that the cost of this probably came from the Democratic Government of Costa Rica and an institution there and the Government of Canada, and it so states.

Mr. DREIER of California. Reclaiming my time, the gentleman is absolutely right. It is an excellent effort, and I am sure he is getting ready to underscore this. But it is still a complex piece.

Mr. GOSS. If the gentleman will yield further, absolutely, and this is an important effort by the democratic nations which has been made to get this type of information out. What this really underscores is the complexity of the task that is confronting the people who wish to hold democratic elections in Nicaragua, because I would suggest the average Nicaraguan would regard this document about the same way the average American regards our tax instructions from the IRS. It is apparently that confusing. I expect that to the campesinos in the rural areas, and if Nicaragua is nothing else it has very important rural areas; it has many important rural areas, and it is an agricultural type of country. The effort that has been put out should be admired, and we need to applaud it, but to make that happen, to get from where we are with an undisclosed number of people of questionable identification, how are they going to verify who they are and where they live, this is going to be very difficult to get all of those people registered in time for this close-out period of registration, which is the end of the month of October, actually not even the end of the month. It is the fourth Sunday of October, which seems to me to be a formidable task. We did ask why only four Sundays to register, and I do not think we got a proper answer to that question. I think that it is a question that further delegations must ask.

Mr. DREIER of California. Reclaiming my time, the gentleman is absolutely right. It clearly is stacked in favor of having the largest distance between the election, which people know is set for February 25, 1990, and the process of registration. There are many in this country who have advocated that we should have same-day registration. I do not quite go that far. I do believe that to have a period of only 4 days in which a citizen of Nicaragua can register to vote and then having that gap of November 1 all the way to February 25 of the next year, virtually 4 months away from the last time that they are able to register, is stacked against those who are challenging the party in power.

Mr. GOSS. I appreciate that, because the gentleman is exactly on point. I believe the international press today attributed a statement from the Arias government indicating that in fact the campaign, the election, was going to be over the end of October. That clearly alluded to this registration process, because we were informed by both sides and, of course, we saw the Sandinistas as well as the opposition while we were there because we were in a neutral observer role; they made it very clear that if you have not registered exactly properly it does not matter what you think or what else you do, that if you miss your last chance to register when the fourth Sunday of October is gone, you are disenfranchised from the election, and if there is a mistake in the election process, you are also disenfranchised, as it is a little complicated for the average campesino, or if there are mistakes, and there are many people aware of the political situation in Nicaragua who know the average campesino is displeased with the Nicaraguan Government.

Mr. DREIER of California. Reclaiming my time briefly, I am not going to share the name of our colleague, because I believe it is privileged, but the gentleman from Florida and I had lunch today with a group of people, and frankly I think virtually every one at the table with the exception of us serve on the other side of the aisle, and I will say that this gentleman serves on the other side of the aisle. He is from the home State of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss], and he was in Panama during that election. I do not know what it will take to go and find that, but I do not want to use his name at this point, because it was a lunch discussion. But he did say, after hearing of these experiences, and if I am incorrect, I hope the gentleman will correct me, but he said, "It sounds to me as if it is another Panamanian election in the making." Is that correct?

Mr. GOSS. I would not wish to attribute any words to anyone, but I think I did hear those comments. I am sure that that gentleman, if he were present in this Chamber at this moment, would elaborate on that, and I think that he would come to that conclusion. But he will have that chance if he desires.

If I may finish this point, there is no question that this whole system of registration, the way they have it set up, requires poll watchers, and they have provided for poll watchers. Perhaps the most disturbing things that we ran into as we went around to some of them, and there are 4,300 polling places throughout the country, but perhaps the most disturbing thing we found was, and I guess we got to 12 or so, because we split up into two teams, and we got to 11 or 12.

Mr. DREIER of California. Of the seven spots which the Ballengers and I visited, we found that there were only two with poll watchers from UNO [the United Nicaraguan Opposition] the 14-party alliance which is challenging the Government. On the other hand, in every spot there was a poll watcher overseeing this registration process from the FSLN, and I think that the gentleman from Florida, in his delegation, had about the same experience.

Mr. GOSS. We had about the same percentage. If the gentleman will yield further, I think that we found in one instance that one of the people there had indicated to us that the actual UNO poll watcher had come and presented himself but had been told that his identification was out of order.

Mr. DREIER of California. That is a very important point, and I wish the gentleman would make it again. I did not have an experience like that at the seven polling or registration spots that I went into, so while I saw FSLN poll watchers at each registration spot and found only two UNO watchers, I heard nothing of attempts to keep them out. In fact, at every spot I asked they said, "Anyone is welcome here. They are welcome to be here." I think the gentleman should underscore the report he got in that particular polling spot.

Mr. GOSS. I appreciate the gentleman underscoring that.

Mr. DREIER of California. I think that point needs to be made again, because it is an important one.

Mr. GOSS. I think it is one that needs followup. It turned out not to be an isolated fact, that the identification was being challenged of the UNO poll watchers. Whether it was being properly challenged, I do not know. It was too early to tell. But it is important to underscore that.

Mr. DREIER of California. It obviously was being challenged if the UNO poll watcher was not able to be in the spot where registration was taking place. Am I not correct?

Mr. GOSS. That would seem to be the conclusion. There were other reports apparently that were made available to the press that this was happening elsewhere in the country, and I obviously did not see those myself. But I understand that that was the concern, and that there was some talk about irregularities and that that matter was being discussed as we left the country. I have not had a chance to pursue it today obviously.

One other point that we might talk about that we did raise and that is very important to this registration process which ends the fourth Sunday in October is all of these people who are on the borders who are political refugees who want very much to go back to their home country, to Nicaragua, and would love to vote in a democratic election there, are very scared about going back. They do not wish to go back unless they have some good assurances that they can be reintegrated into society safely and with some opportunity for economic survival as well. There is no provision in the registration as far as I can see to accommodate the timeframe, the practical timeframe, of getting them from where they are now back into the country in time to register in order that they can participate in this election in February.

Why we have to have the registration stop on the fourth Sunday in October, again, remains a bit of a mystery, and I think a very troubling one.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman is absolutely right. We did, in our conversation with the Interior Minister, the head of the secret police, Comandante Tomas Borge, ask if it could be extended, and just like he pardoned those prisoners, as our friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE], indicated, he said, "Well, we may be able to do that." It struck me as rather ironic that the head of the secret police could determine whether or not the registration process itself could be extended.

I think that as we go through the hurdles which have been imposed on the individual, I think there is a point that we should make, too, about the hurdles imposed on the United Nicaraguan Opposition themselves. One thing that we should point to is that one of the members who went at 8 o'clock yesterday morning in Managua to register to vote was confronted by a uniformed officer who said, "What can I do for you? Why are you here?" She pointed out accurately, "This is a question which is clearly out of line to ask on registration day when we want to encourage Nicaraguan citizens to exercise their civic duty," and I think that she was right in pointing to that.

But there was really not the welcome mat out as she was getting ready to exercise her duty to register.

The second point that is important to make, in a political campaign that we have here in the United States one of the greatest technological advances that I am sure that the gentleman from Florida, the gentleman from Indiana and I use, is the phone bank. The phone bank is used to get people to register, to get them out. We just found out this afternoon that the UNO headquarters, a very small headquarters in downtown Managua, not only do they not have a phone bank, but while it takes in Nicaragua 1 month for the average Nicaraguan citizen to get a telephone installed into their home, 3 months ago UNO, the United Nicaraguan Opposition, asked to have a telephone installed in their headquarters. They made that request 3 months ago.

When we were there yesterday, Mr. Speaker, there was a telephone line which was extended from the home next door into the UNO headquarters. They were not allowed to make any outgoing calls. They were only allowed to receive incoming calls into their UNO headquarters from the phone which is in the name of the next door neighbor. This is a line which was dragged in there.

Talk about an uphill battle and a hurdle that needs to be overcome. One cannot help but be frustrated with the process.

I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GOSS. I appreciate that, because I think there is more to say without trying to get into too much detail. To give the flavor of this, one of the great concerns that is going on in Nicaragua now is the draft. By the accords of the Central America Presidents, it has been determined that there will be no further draft during the electoral process so everybody can participate.

We heard reports that in fact the draft of the reserves, as opposed to the new draft, that the reserves were continuing on.

That is troublesome, obviously, because it means that those who are drafted may very well lose the opportunity to register while they are off doing their military duty. It is equally of concern because we have reports that some of those who were drafted were also UNO poll watchers, and they suddenly had to abandon their poll-watching assignments.

Mr. DREIER of California. So is the gentleman saying it seems to be the poll watchers are the first ones to be drafted so they are losing their poll watchers to the draft?

Mr. GOSS. I cannot make that conclusion, but I think that is the question that needs to be asked of the authorities in Nicaragua. I know that there is enough concern about it that several people brought that to our attention.

Mr. DREIER of California. That is a very important point that the next bipartisan delegation which goes to Nicaragua should ask.

Mr. GOSS. I think it is extremely important, because I am not sure what the voting provisions will be for all of the draft. Of course, I am not exactly sure why the draft is being called now, what is the new threat to the country of Nicaragua, what new problem for their national security exists. We are demobilizing the Contras, as everybody knows and in fact we have had much conversation about.

Mr. DREIER of California. You never know. The very potent Costa Rican army may invade Nicaragua, and I say that facetiously, of course, because Costa Rica has no army to their south.

Mr. GOSS. I appreciate the opportunity to share some of these observations about the registration process and the unevenness of the playing field, because we have talked about the telephone a little bit and some of the other signs we have seen. Some of the basic underlying normal checkpoints are in very shaky shape.

For example, the composition of the supreme electoral council, the people who will referee this, is still a contested question, with four Sandinistas versus one non-Sandinista making the decisions on that council.

Mr. DREIER of California. If I could reclaim my time, I think the gentleman is absolutely wrong when he said it is contested. It is clearly lopsided in favor of the Sandinistas.

Mr. GOSS. I accept the gentleman's correction. I certainly believe that the problem of the access to the media, particularly television, is a very serious concern. It is very lopsided, if I may also borrow the gentleman's word for that.

We know that the government controls it, and that means the Sandinistas control it. We saw evidence that their 12-hour convention was on. I believe the gentleman had conversation with Comandante Borge on that point, did you not?

Mr. DREIER of California. Reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for pointing that out. Yes, I did raise the issue with Comandante Borge as I was driving him in his Land Rover vehicle through Nicaragua. I have to say, Mr. Speaker, it was a very interesting experience for me to be driving with Comandante Borge, the head of the Secret Police, the Interior Ministry, as my passenger.

I said to him, "Comandante, it seems to me rather strange that you would have had 12 hours of uninterrupted television coverage of the FSLN party convention carried on television."

He said, "Well, it wasn't 12 hours, it was a little less than that."

If it had been 10 hours it would have seemed rather ironic, because I did say to him, "Now I understand that UNO, the United Nicaraguan Opposition, is entitled to a total of 20 minutes a week on television."

When I said this to him he said, "Well, yes, David, we did make a mistake in controlling the television time for that length." I thought that was rather interesting that he said it.

My next question, of course, is what will be done about it. That is the question that remains for all of us.

I would be happy to further yield to my friend.

Mr. GOSS. I think there are some positive things that I would like to underscore for our colleagues. I know our colleague from Indiana would like to jump into this, on the question of what we can do.

There is no doubt that these bipartisan congressional delegations have an impact. The Sandinista Government, which is clearly a Marxist totalitarian government, it acts like one, it looks like one, it claims to be one and I believe is one, has responded to international scrutiny.

The mood when I was last in Nicaragua, which was about 2 months ago, was very much different. The welcome this time, while it may have been contrived, or access was very much better. We were given freedom to travel around. We were given freedom to observe what was going on in the town squares and the marketplace. In fact, we were conducted through the marketplace as my colleague knows by the commandante in one case.

The fact is this is working. This international scrutiny is giving the people of Nicaragua the opportunity for free elections. I think that we are far from being where we need to be, but I think the start that has been made is extremely encouraging. Obviously we have to be vigilant.

I think that my esteemed colleagues from California challenged the commandante on the question of the list, the human rights question that our colleague, Mr. MICKEY EDWARDS, from his delegation and his colleague, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. BILL GRANT, had raised, what about the existing political prisoners.

The commandante pledged to publish in the newspaper in Managua the names, not the numbers, but the names, so that those names of prisoners that they claimed to have can be matched with the lists that we have and the other human rights organizations of people who are missing and unaccounted for. I think that is a positive accomplishment.

We had a discussion with the commandante about political amnesty across the board. While he equivocated and qualified his answers, even though the accords clearly call for political amnesty for political prisoners now because of the demobilization process taking place, maybe it is being used as a chip. I think they are tuned in to the requirement for that or this will never be labled a free and fair election.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. It is important to point out that when we pressed Commandante Borge for a specific date, he would just say over and over again, "Soon, in a few months."

I, as the gentleman knows, had a tendency to be rather aggressive in the conversations which I had with the commandante and tried to pin him down. He refused to establish a date certain.

It will be very interesting to see exactly when we do get a response to that request.

I would be happy to further yield.

Mr. GOSS. I appreciate my colleague yielding further. I would like to commend the gentleman from California and offer my colleagues a statement that I felt he showed great courage in pushing issues that I think were very difficult to push. I think the response to that was very clearly positive, because I think they in the Sandinista Government were able to see just how strong the commitment is to having free and fair democratic elections there.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman from Florida for that.

I know that my friend from Indiana [Mr. BURTON], who I cannot say simply waited patiently, but he has seized this microphone for a while, I know that the gentleman has the perspective of having been to Central America but not on this first weekend.

I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I almost left when my colleague from North Carolina indicated I was old enough to remember the Andrews Sisters. Obviously I am a lot younger than that—you are not laughing.

Mr. DREIER of California. I guess we should go to the question then: Do you remember the Andrews Sisters?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I do, and I remember that song, incidentally, a fine song.

Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all I know my colleagues have not been taken in by Mr. Borge. Mr. Borge has made these promises time and again in Sapao, Esquipulas, in 1979 they were even talking about political prisoners. Many of those people are still languishing in prisons, some estimate as high as 10,000 or 11,000 still there.

So we take that with a grain of salt, at least I do.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I should tell the gentleman that we met and interviewed a number of them. As my friend from Florida knows very well, I hit the jackpot when it came to constituents. The thing that struck me was these prisoners were sticking notes through the bars to our assistants who were there.

I was given these addresses that were just a few miles from my home. One prisoner has a son who is a student at Rio Hondo College in Whittier, CA.

It was amazing to see that. These people have been in there languishing, some for 11 years. That is simply for opposing the Sandinistas.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. That is right. Let me just say that I was at Yamales about 5 or 6 weeks ago. I flew into the Contra camp in Honduras and had a conference. They had waited about 2 hours in a driving rain in order to talk to me. There were about 6,000 men in the formation.

When I went up to speak, they started hollering "Freedom for Nicaragua," you could hear it reverberating throughout the mountains surrounding the Yamales camp. It was an inspirational moment for me.

Let me just say that they would like to go back to Nicaragua and be in a free Nicaragua and participate in a free and fair election. But they do not believe the Communist Sandinistas are going to live up to their commitments and therefore they are reluctant to lay down their arms and go back naked to the wrath of the Communist Sandinista Government.

Many of their colleagues have reported, after coming out of Nicaragua, that there have been murders of Campesinos, peasants who have alleged to have been supporters of the Contras. So they are reluctant to go back into that country.

There are 42,000 dependents plus the 10,000 or 12,000 Contras at that camp in Yamales. So there are over 50,000 people there who would like to go back and vote in a free and fair election in Nicaragua but they are reluctant to do so.

Mr. DREIER of California. I should let the gentleman know that we specifically asked Commandante Borge about that issue. He said, "No, it would be too complex for us to allow anyone who was not in Nicaragua to vote and exercise that right in the election."

I think that is a very good point that needs to be made because, as the son-in-law of candidate Violetta Chamorro said, clearly about 15 percent of the Nicaraguan population is not in Nicaragua.

That is going to be a big block of a vote. Obviously those 15 percent are not quite sympathetic to the kind of government which exists there. They have fled the repression of Daniel Ortega.

I yield to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I have been waiting 45 minutes. May I just finish up?

Mr. DREIER of California. You will wrap it up then and we will have an opportunity to go to the leader of our delegation.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Two real quick points. No. 1, if the Sandinistas were to allow free and fair elections, which I do not believe they are going to do, they still control the military because their constitution says that the Sandinista party controls the military down there.

It is the same thing that goes on in the Soviet Union, Poland, and every place else. I think all of our colleagues ought to know that the Communists intend to keep control of Nicaragua no matter what happens. That will be the final point I make.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman. To wrap up, I would like to yield to our distinguished leader of the delegation, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his kind remarks and the opportunity to present this tonight.

Our reason for being here is to, I hope, stimulate our colleagues to this challenge of going down there, being a part of this, understanding what is happening, and responding.

This to me is the last great chance for democratic elections, certainly for many years to come, in a neighboring country that is a very important country to us.

I happen to be from Florida. Central America is truly in my back yard. We share the Gulf of Mexico. That is not as important to me as the fact that there are an awful lot of good people in Nicaragua who want the chance to vote. This is the democratic hemisphere. I certainly believe we should assist in that effort.

I think we have a chance. I do not believe it will be easy. They have not had what you would call a free democratic election in Nicaragua in a great number of years, 30 or more. Some people could contest even that differently. My colleague from California has pointed out to me that the elections in 1984 were very largely regarded as a total sham. I believe even the opposition withdrew, it was so bad.

Finally, I think there is a very clear distinction here. We have a Marxist totalitarian government that wants to stay in power which has said that even if it loses the election it is going to try to find a way to stay in power. They are not going to give it up easily. We have some democratic people who are trying to get together, very much like the people who founded our country 200 years ago, who got together and made their act work and bought, for us, democracy.

I think that is what is at stake here.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank the gentleman for his excellent contribution and the leadership that he showed us. I could not say it any better.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

DEVELOPMENTS IN THE NICARAGUAN ELECTORAL PROCESS

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, this is another in a series of statements on the Nicaraguan electoral process, designed to provide my colleagues with the objective information about that process so that we can better judge its legitimacy.

On August 4, the government of Nicaragua and the Nicaraguan opposition parties entered into a historic agreement on procedures for a free and fair election. I wish to share the text of that agreement with my colleagues so they can judge it for themselves.

The agreement follows:

POLITICAL AGREEMENT

On August 3 and 4, 1989, the President of the Republic of Nicaragua, Commander of the Revolution Daniel Ortega Saavedra, and representatives of the legally constituted political parties gathered in the Olof Palme Convention Center in Managua, capital of the Republic, successfully concluded a National Dialogue carried out in fulfillment of the agreements subscribed by the Central American Presidents on February 14 of this year in Costa del Sol, El Salvador.

The National Assembly directorate, the Supreme Court and the Supreme Electoral Council were present throughout the National Dialogue. Observers from the United Nations, the Organization of American States, the Center for Democracy and members of the honorable accredited diplomatic corps also attended.

As a result of the National Dialogue, widely covered by the national and international media, the President of the Republic and the representatives of the political parties hereby:

AGREE

I. To affirm before the Nicaraguan people and international public opinion, the common will to contribute to the success of the peace efforts that will reach a decisive moment at upcoming Central American Presidential Summit to take place in Tela, Honduras.

In this context, the Government of Nicaragua and the political parties call upon the Central American Presidents to approve the plan for the demobilization and voluntary relocation or repatriation of the irregular forces located in Honduran territory, in keeping with the Costa del Sol Agreement and in the framework of the Esquipulas II agreements.

The Government of Nicaragua commits itself to promulgate a broad and unconditional amnesty law for those persons detained or being sought for having violated the Law for the Maintenance of Order and Public Security and related legislation, which would enter into effect upon completion of the Plan for the Demobilization and Voluntary relocation or Repatriation.

II. The political parties call upon the Governments with interests in the Central American region to abstain from covert activities in the Nicaraguan electoral process.

All material support for political parties and alliances that participate in the elections should be undertaken in accordance with Nicaraguan Law.

III. The Government of Nicaragua and the political parties commit themselves to consolidate the necessary legal and political conditions for the development of a free and just electoral process, with equal guarantees for all participating parties.

The political parties pledge, therefore, to submit lists of citizens for the formation of the Ballot Receiving Boards as stipulated in the Electoral Law.

IV. The President of the Republic:

1. Will carry out a recruitment rescheduling for the Patriotic Military Service in such a way as to guarantee that no recruitment will take place in the period between September 1989 to February 1990.

2. Will immediately introduce legislation in the National Assembly to reform the Public Media and Social Communication Law so that in matters pertaining to elections, the application of this Law shall be governed directly by the Supreme Electoral Council.

3. Will immediately introduce legislation in the National Assembly to rescind Decree 10-74 (Law for the Maintenance of Order and Public Security). He will likewise introduce legislation in the National Assembly to reform Article 494 of the Penal Code.[1]

4. Will immediately introduce legislation in the National Assembly to amend the Law on Jurisdictional Duties of the Sandinista Police, rescinding the parts granting its jurisdiction.

5. In compliance with Numeral 2.1.2 of Article 218 of the Electoral Law, thirty minutes of continuous air time will be allotted, from Monday through Saturday, for informational purposes to all participating parties or alliances on Channel 2 of the Sandinista Television System during the period of August 25 through December 2, 1989. This period of free airspace will be programmed between 6:00 and 9:00 P.M. by the Supreme Electoral Council in consultation with the political parties or alliances, in accordance with Article 109, paragraph 2 of the Electoral Law.

6. Will request the directorate of the National Assembly to immediately initiate the debate and approval of the Civil Service Law.

7. The Government of Nicaragua will immediately release prisoners sentenced for activities in violation of the Law on the Maintenance of Order and Public Safety that are in a poor state of health as certified by the Human Rights and Peace Commission of the National Assembly or in the procedure established in the Penal Code.

8. The Government of Nicaragua will review the release of prisoners contained in lists submitted by political parties that subscribe the present agreement in which they demonstrate that the said prisoners are members of the corresponding political parties and are all detained for political activities.

9. The Government reaffirms the guarantees for the different types of property, therefore they are not subject to confiscations, expropriations of interference on account of strictly political factors.

V. The President of the Republic and the political parties signatories of this Accord agree that the President and Vice-President of the Republic to be elected by popular vote in the February 25, 1990 elections will assume office on April 25 of the same year, following the procedures stipulated in Article 149 of the Constitution.[2]

The Government and political parties suscribing this accord undertake to support the expedited approval of a transitory disposition of the Constitution for the exclusive purpose of facilitating the assuming of Office of the elected representatives to the National Assembly on April 24.

VI. The political parties signatories to this Accord, with the support of the President of the Republic, propose to the Supreme Electoral Council, the following:

1. To submit the catalogue with the lists of registered voters to each party or alliance participating in the electoral process no later than 60 days before the elections.

2. To submit copies of opening and closing registration, founding and closing of the vote, vote counting and voting vouchers in each of the Ballot Receiving Boards to each of the poll-watchers of each political party or alliance.

To prepare duplicates of the election catalogues, one of which is to stay in the Supreme Electoral Council and the other in the corresponding Regional Electoral Council, starting from the period of voter registration up until three months after the election.

4. Once the vote tally has been concluded, that one or two of the political parties or alliances' poll-watchers in the Ballot Receiving Board be allowed to travel with the sealed packages of election documents to assure their safety, in order that these be recounted in the Regional Electoral Councils.

5. That the Supreme Electoral Council continue its efforts with foreign governments and international organizations to obtain technical and financial assistance in

[1] Article 494 of the Penal Code refers to the penalty for inciting unrest or crime. According to the Penal Code the maximum sentence for such action is two months. Under the Law for Maintenance of Public Order, the maximum sentence for such activities is two years.

[2] Article 149 of the Constitution establishes the procedure to follow when both the President and Vice-President are indefinitely removed from office. Under the terms established, the President of the National Assembly would temporarily assume the duties of the President and must name within 72 hours someone to fulfill the Office of the Executive. Under the Agreement offered by President Ortega, the incoming President and Vice-President would assume office on April 25. In effect, he would hold office for a 7 year period, the 10 months remaining in the current term and the subsequent 6 year term.

ST. MARY'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH CELEBRATES 125TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take this moment to recognize the 125th anniversary of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church in Saint Clair, Schuylkill County, PA.

St. Mary's was established in 1864 by the Most Reverend James F. Wood. Since its founding, St. Mary's has been an integral part of the Saint Clair community, providing a place of worship for its parishioners and serving as an ambassador of faith and goodwill for all citizens for Saint Clair surrounding areas.

Today, St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church is one of the most recognized institutions in Schuylkill County. The current pastor, the Reverend Francis Schoenauer, and the congregation of St. Mary's continue to serve God by spreading his word and administering His faith to others. Indeed, the 125th anniversary of St. Mary's is a celebration of this service as well as a celebration for God.

On Sunday, October 29, 1989, the congregation of St. Mary's will celebrate their 125th anniversary by holding a Mass of Thanksgiving followed by a special dinner. I congratulate Father Schoenauer as well as the entire congregation of St. Mary's on this special occasion and wish them continued success in the future.

TRIBUTE TO NINA LAGERGREN, SISTER OF RAOUL WALLENBERG, AND TO THE SWEDISH RAOUL WALLENBERG ASSOCIATION

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, this week we will mark the eighth anniversary of the signing of historic legislation making Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of the United States. Wallenberg—the hero of the Holocaust who saved over 100,000 men, women, and children from Nazi butchers in Budapest during World War II and who now has been a prisoner in the Soviet Union for 44 years—was the second person after Sir Winston Churchill to be so honored by the American people.

Mr. Speaker, when Raoul Wallenberg was abducted by Soviet officials in January 1945, he was swallowed up into the horrors of the Soviet gulag. But there have been numerous credible reports, some very recent, that Wallenberg is still alive in Soviet prisons. Despite this, Soviet officials continue to claim that he died in 1947.

Over the 44 long years since Raoul Wallenberg was last free, many people have fought for his release—but none have worked more diligently than Wallenberg's half-sister, Nina Lagergren.

Nina worked with her mother and father for the release of Wallenberg by calling attention to his situation and urging Soviet officials to review his case. This task was not an easy one: not only did the Soviets refuse to cooperate, but also Swedish officials at that time were less than accommodating and were not anxious to deal with the Wallenberg case. Since her parents' death in February 1979, Nina and her brother Dr. Guy von Dardel, have continued that struggle alone. In the summer of 1979, they established the Swedish Raoul Wallenberg Association. Over the last decade more than 3,000 people have joined the association to help in the fight to free Wallenberg.

Nina has been one of the most vocal advocates for the release of her half-brother. She was the moving force behind the well-known-Stockholm Tribunal where, for the first time in history, all available information concerning Wallenberg was made public and brought to the attention of the media. She also participated in the international hearing in Copenhagen of the Sakharov Commission and the international human rights conference in Madrid.

Nina has made frequent visits to the United States to win the support of Members of Congress, Senators, and administration officials. She came to the United States in the summer of 1979 and gave invaluable help to my wife, Annette, in establishing the Free Wallenberg Committee of the United States, the first Wallenberg committee established in our country. The honorary chairmen of that committee were Senators Frank Church, CLAIBORNE, PELL, DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN, and RUDY BOSCHWITZ.

In recognition of Mrs. Lagergren's extensive efforts to call attention to the plight of her brother, she and her brother Guy von Dardel, were invited to participate in the signing by President Reagan of my legislation making Wallenberg an honorary U.S. citizen.

Mr. Speaker, Nina Lagergren and Sonja Sonnenfeld, the distinguished secretary of the Swedish Raoul Wallenberg Association, will join us here in Washington for events this week to mark the eighth anniversary of the signing of the Wallenberg honorary citizenship legislation. Mrs. Sonnenfeld has also given many years of hard work and tireless dedication to freeing Raoul Wallenberg.

Their visit to Washington this week is most timely. She and Mrs. Sonnenfeld, Nina's brother Guy von Dardel, and Ambassador Per Anger, who was involved in Wallenberg's life-saving activities in Budapest in 1944, have been invited to visit the Soviet Union later this month. We are hopeful that their visit will in fact lead to the release of Wallenberg and to confirmation of his imprisonment in the Soviet Union for nearly 45 years.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to Nina Lagergren, Sonja Sonnenfeld, and the Swedish Raoul Wallenberg Association.

CHILDREN'S NATIONAL MEDICAL CENTER COMMEMORATES CHILD HEALTH DAY 1989

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, today our Nation observes Child Health Day 1989, in honor of which communities all across the country are focusing On health care issues critical to the well-being of our children and families. This year's theme for Child Health Day is "First Step to the Future: Prenatal Care for All." Setting this goal to ensure universal access to quality prenatal care and to medical attention during the critical early stages of an infant's life is a fundamental and significant step toward reducing infant mortality and improving the health of mothers and babies nationwide.

As we commemorate Child Health Day 1989 in the District of Columbia, I would like to recognize the dedicated work of Children's National Medical Center, affectionately known here in the District of Columbia as Children's Hospital, as an innovator and national leader in child health care. For nearly 120 years now, Children's National Medical Center has been a champion of children's rights to accessible, dependable, competent medical care; and it is the preeminent provider of quality health care services to infants, children, and young people throughout the metropolitan Washington area. Through its excellent research and education programs, as well as through political advocacy, Children's Hospital plays a central role in working to reduce the District of Columbia's alarmingly high infant mortality rate.

One program worthy of special note is the Perinatal Outreach Project, managed by Children's Hopital's Home Health Care Services in conjunction with the District of Columbia Department of Human Services. Through this program, Children's Home Health Care Services provides a variety of professional services to prenatal and postpartum mothers, and to newborns, who are at risk for unfavorable pregnancy or life expectancy or life expectancy outcomes. Home Health Care Services also treats children at home for a variety of illnesses; in 1988 alone, more than 500 patients benefited from over 10,000 home visits.

Additionally, the Perinatal Education Exchange Program is a mechanism through which Children's makes available to all health professionals in metropolitan Washington involved in the care of perinatal patients educational materials and programs as a means of updating and extending their medical skills with expectant and postpartum mothers and their newborns. Among the continuing education opportunities are various orientations to Children's 40-bed neonatal intensive care unit, exhibiting state-of-the-art medical technology to treat low-birthweight infants, as well as those with congenital abnormalities and genetic disorders or other critical problems. One of the most unique features of the neonatal unit is the extracorporeal membrane oxygenation [ECMO] treatment program, a revolutionary therapy that saves the lives of newborn infants suffering from acute respiratory distress. Since the ECMO program was pioneered at Children's National Medical Center in 1984, the lives of more than 150 children have been saved through this advanced technology. In fact, whereas 5 years ago 80 percent of the children treated for ECMO at Children's Hospital would have died, today less than 20 percent of these children are likely to die.

Finally, I would like to recognize the Comprehensive Health Care Program sponsored by Children's Hospital. For more than two decades, its two neighborhood clinics in the District of Columbia have provided primary health care services, with an emphasis on prevention and early detection of health problems and on the promotion of good health among inner city children.

Mr. Speaker, in our efforts to improve the health and well-being of America's children here in the District of Columbia and throughout our Nation, we as legislators and citizens must ensure that access to quality prenatal and newborn medical care is available to all mothers and children who need it. As we commemorate Child Health Day 1989, I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting the Children's National Medical Center as a model of long-term commitment to reducing the tragic incidence of infant mortality and of comprehensive efforts to meet the growing health care needs of infants, children, and youth in the National Capital area.

PUTTING COAL IN AMERICA'S FUTURE

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, it was an honor for me last week to be selected as recipient of the annual Award for Innovation in Coal Conversion from the University of Pittsburgh. This award is presented as part of the Annual International Coal Conference.

Unfortunately, consideration by the House of Representatives of key budget votes prevented me from being at the conference in person. I spoke to the group, however, through a phone hook up, and I wanted to summarize for the RECORD the remarks I made.

AMERICA: WE MUST MOVE TOWARD COAL

There is a correlation between what happens with energy and the fate of every other major issue facing the U.S.

Without dependable supplies of reasonably priced energy, a Nation is weak, its economy stagnant, and its foreign policy subject to manipulation.

With plentiful energy in a Nation, its economy can prosper. Throughout our Nation's history, coal has been a reliable and plentiful source of energy. Coal's importance to our country's future will be even greater.

As this decade closes, the country's increased reliance on imported petroleum poses a serious threat to energy price, supply, and security. The U.S. Department of Energy has projected that under a higher price scenario, the daily worldwide petroleum consumption may exceed production as early as 1995. Already, we are back importing over 50 percent of U.S. used oil.

We have a critical need for establishment of a cohesive energy policy committed to reducing dependence on imported fuels and increasing the use of domestic resources.

Coal remains our Nation's most plentiful and reasonable priced energy source and is the logical choice to be used in the 1990s and beyond. No resource offers more evidence of our current energy stability, or greater hope for future energy security than coal.

While progress has not been made as quickly on energy policy as I would have liked, we are seeing some steps forward.

One area is research. This year I added funding into the defense budget for the Air Force's research program on development of jet fuels. This will determine if jet fuels can be made from coal.

In a second area, the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, which I serve on, restored vital funding to the budget. We appropriated $423 million for fossil energy research and development. In the past five years, this Subcommittee has restored about $¾ billion for coal research and development that had been marked for deletion. Of course, we accomplished this while staying within our budget deficit guidelines.

Third, we will see parts of an energy policy develop in relation to our debate on environmental controls. We want—and the Country needs—a fair "acid rain" control provision. It cannot, however, be at the cost of burning coal in an environmentally safe way in the future. And it cannot be at a cost to consumers that one of my electric utility companies estimates at a 17% increase under current legislation. We can balance our environmental and energy needs for the future, and this remains a priority.

Fourth, we are seeing movement toward commercialization on the Clean Coal Technology Project. Response to the first two clean coal procurements indicate a high level of interest and support for the program. We appropriated $575 million this year for the third year solicitation, and approximately 45 proposals were received by the Department of Energy last month.

The area I represent has been hard-hit economically by cut-backs in coal use. We have many long-time mining families unemployed. We need these families back to work, both for the economy and for the energy needs of America. We have more steps to take, but we must continue working on energy. How successful the Nation is in dealing with our National energy situation will impact coal plus also what type of America will enter into the next century. I am resolved to keep coal what it has always been—our timeless energy source.

STORMS NEVER LAST

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the true legends of country music, Waylon Jennings.

From his first public appearance in 1951 at the Muleshoe Rodeo Parade in Muleshoe, TX, at the age of 14, to the top of the country music charts, Waylon Jennings has made contributions to the music industry that will be remembered throughout history.

Perhaps Waylon's most significant contribution to music history is the so-called Outlaw movement he and friend Willie Nelson led during the 1970's. Waylon and Willie literally changed the course of the entire country music industry with their distinctive song stylings and performances. The songs they sang, from "Good Hearted Woman" to "Honky Tonk Heroes," were performed with the emotion, love, pain, and joy that only someone who lived the lyrics could render.

Waylon paid his dues.

From the day Waylon's mother bought him a Stellar Guitar for $5 when he was only 10 years old, to the time he received $10 for performing on the Saturday Night Jamboree at the Whiteface Texas Theater, his first paying musical job, this icon of country music's dedication to his craft never faltered.

When times were tough, and paydays few and far between, Waylon continued to sing the songs he loved, play the 1 night stands in 1 horse towns and kept on keeping on.

Success followed some hard times. Nearly 60 albums later, through thousands of performances in countries across the world, and after numerous TV and movie appearances, Waylon would be the first to tell you that he wouldn't have done things any other way. Changes in his lifestyle and attitudes are reflected in his songs, and so are the lessons about life he's learned along the way.

Country music writers might argue if asked to identify the high point of Waylon's career, his most significant contribution to country music or even his best recording, but I am certain that Waylon Jennings himself would have no hesitation if he were asked about the most important event in his life. It would be his marriage to singer-songwriter Jesse Coleter on October 26, 1969, in Las Vegas, NV.

For 20 years Waylon and Jesse have shared an incredible love, supporting each other, sharing and living a storybook happy ever after life together.

On October 14, 1989, in Phoenix, AZ, Waylon Jennings will be honored at the Heard Museum for his contribution to mankind through his music. A bronze bust of Waylon by Scottsdale, AZ, artist-sculptor Jim Branscum will be presented on this occasion.

On October 4, 1989, Mr. and Mrs. Waylon Jennings are hosting a special reception to unveil the bust at the Jennings home in Brentwood, TN.

The bust is appropriately named for a song Jesse wrote entitled "Storms Never Last."

The Jennings have proven that storms don't last. They've shown that hard work, talent, dedication, and love will bring out the silver lining in every cloud.

I want to pay my own tribute today in the U.S. House of Representatives as a fan and someone who appreciates the hard work of Waylon and Jesse.

I can think of no more appropriate way to conclude my tribute to Waylon and Jesse than with the words Jesse penned:

Storms never last do they baby?
Bad times all pass with the wind.
Your hand in mine stills the thunder, and you'd make the sun want to shine.
I've followed you down so many roads, baby.
I've picked wild flowers and sung you soft, sad songs.
And every road we took, God knows our search was for the truth, and the storm that's brewing now won't be the last.
Storms never last, do they baby?
Bad times all pass with the wind.
Your hand in mine stills the thunder, and you'd make the sun want to shine.

BUSH, THE U.N. AND TOO MANY PEOPLE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert the following article by Prof. Richard N. Gardner, Columbia University, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. "Bush, the U.N. and Too Many People" appeared in the New York Times September 22, 1989, and the article merits close review by the Congress.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 22, 1989]

BUSH, THE U.N. AND TOO MANY PEOPLE

(By Richard N. Gardner)

When President Bush addresses the General Assembly on Monday, he will not call the U.N. "an unreal place . . . torn by tensions" as he did during the 1988 campaign. Now he is likely to praise U.N. peacekeeping forces in regional trouble spots and call for stronger U.N. measures to protect the global environment.

But for domestic political reasons, there will almost certainly be a major omission: world population growth. This will threaten international order and the world's life support systems in the decades ahead.

The world population, which stood at 1.5 billion in 1900, is 5 billion today and expected to grow to 6.2 billion in the year 2000 and to 8.5 billion in 2025. It may reach 10 billion before it levels off toward the end of the next century, with nearly 9 out of 10 persons living in developing countries.

These are the U.N.'s median projections, based on the assumption that fertility in the developing world will drop by a third in 30 to 40 years. If fertility declines at today's slow pace, world population could reach 14 billion or more before stabilizing.

To grasp the gravity of the challenge, consider the U.N.'s median projections for third world countries in the years 2025. Egypt would grow from 51 million to 94 million; Nigeria, from 105 million to 301 million; Mexico, from 85 million to 150 million; India, from 819 million to 1,446 billion.

Incredibly, the Reagan Administration held that "population growth is, of itself, a neutral phenomenon. It is not necessarily good or ill."

But no government, no academic expert, has the faintest idea of how to provide adequate food, housing, health care, education and gainful employment to such exploding numbers of people, particularly as they crowd into megacities such as Mexico City, Calcutta and Cairo.

Moreover, the growing numbers of desperate poor implied in these figures will accelerate the ferocious assault on the environment under way in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Unless these population trends are altered, our descendants will witness misery, mass migrations and violence born of desperation on a scale we can scarcely imagine.

We should call for an international effort to make information and means of family planning available to all persons in the child-bearing years. (At present, contraceptives are used by only 30 percent of couples in developing countries outside of China.)

Achieving this goal would substantially reduce the ominous U.N. population projections, but would require a tripling of the resources devoted to family planning in the developing countries. Such increased efforts would need to be accompanied by strengthened programs of health care and education and measures to enhance the rights of women.

In 1962, under our first Roman Catholic President, John F. Kennedy, we told the General Assembly we would support international family planning programs. We became a leader in these efforts under later Presidents. But Ronald Reagan, deferring to the right-to-life movement, cut off all aid to the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the U.N. Fund for Population Activities.

One reason given for this reversal was to discourage abortion as a population control measure. But the multilateral programs we have defunded do not finance abortions. The denial of family planning assistance to poor people in developing countries increases the number of abortions, putting at risk the lives of women without access to medical care.

Another reason given was that China, a U.N. fund recipient, sought to control population growth by coercive means. Recent assessments by Congress confirm that Beijing's population policy is not coercive. If the U.S. wishes to maintain its reservations about China's program, U.N. fund population aid to China can be held at current levels and U.S. contributions can be earmarked for other countries.

Let us hope that by his second address to the U.N., Mr. Bush will be ready to say, as he did as U.N. Ambassador in 1971, that population trends in developing countries are "a prescription for tragedy and chaos" and that the U.N. fund "should grow rapidly . . . to a point where it will be making an important impact on world population."

CHRISTIAN HOFFMAN EARNS EAGLE SCOUT AWARD

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, today I want to give special recognition to a young man from the Sixth Congressional District of Pennsylvania who has distinguished himself as a member of Boy Scout Troop No. 103 of Fleetwood, PA. The young man I am speaking of is Christian Hoffman who will be awarded the Eagle Scout Award on October 8, 1989 for his outstanding achievements as a Boy Scout.

Christian has been in scouting since he was 8 years old and one of the highlights of his Scouting career was his Eagle project. For his project, Christian developed a phone service for pre-school children. The service would enable small children to call a local number, at no charge, and hear a story. Christian selected the stories, making sure that each story contained a meaningful message, and the story readers. With the assistance of his teachers and fellow Boy Scouts, Christian was able to provide an innovative service that will benefit young children in his community.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Eagle Scout Award is the highest honor a Scout can earn and is illustrative of Christian Hoffman's ability to excel in a given situation. I commend Christian for his many accomplishments as Boy Scout and congratulate him for earning this high honor. Christian's commitment to excellence is manifest in the Eagle Scout Award and he can be proud of the distinction to be bestowed upon him on October 8.

THE SOVIET UNION SHOULD "COME CLEAN" ON RAOUL WALLENBERG

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, this week we will commemorate the eighth anniversary of the signing in 1981 of historic legislation which made Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of the United States—the second individual to be so honored after Sir Winston Churchill. Wallenberg was the hero of the Holocaust who saved the lives of 100,000 men, women, and children during the tumultuous final days of World War II in Hungary. The decision of the Congress to grant him honorary citizenship was a belated acknowledgment of the enormous contribution he made to humanity.

Mr. Speaker, William Korey—the director of international policy research at B'nai B'rith International in New York and currently completing a study on "American Policy and the Helsinki Process" with a Ford Foundation grant—has written an excellent article which was recently published in the Wall Street Journal. In view of the commemoration of anniversary of Wallenberg's honorary citizenship this week and the forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union of Wallenberg's half-sister and half-brother, Nina Lagergren and Guy von Dardel, and a delegation of the Swedish Raoul Wallenberg Association, I ask that the article be placed in the RECORD and urge my colleagues to give it careful attention.

SOVIETS MUST COME CLEAN ON WALLENBERG

(By William Korey)

Raoul Wallenberg's fate surfaced for a moment last month in Paris at the Helsinki-sponsored conference on the "human dimension," and just as suddenly disappeared down history's "memory hole." The episode, virtually unnoticed by the world-wide press, warrants pubic attention to avoid a continuing Soviet cover-up.

At the Paris meeting, Moscow was on its very best behavior. An extraordinarily large delegation—twice the size of any Western power—was on hand to demonstrate an affability and openness in meeting with nongovernmental reprensentatives and any interested Westerners. On the third day of the conference—June 1—the Soviet delegation held a major news conference designed to show off their specialists in a variety of fields.

Included in the delegation was a high-ranking official of Moscow's Procurator-General's office. Vladimir Andreyev, who is known to have investigated Mr. Wallenberg's case. In this era of glasnost, with some selected "blank spaces" of history being filled in, it was hoped that the tragic disappearance of the extraordinary and courageous Swedish diplomat and resciter of Jews would somehow be elucidated.

It was a new Soviet "voice" that spoke about Mr. Wallenberg. No longer were the comments either hostile or neutral. Rather, Mr. Wallenberg was warmly embraced as a "noble person." The words echoed precisely the language of Ambassador Yuri Kashlev, head of the Soviet delegation to the current and earlier Helsimki talks. Last September, in Vienna, the smooth Soviet diplomat had also characterized Mr. Wallenberg as "noble." Mr. Andreyev went beyond those laudatory comments. The arrest and disappearance of Mr. Wallenberg constituted "a somber page in our history," said the Soviet legal official. He added that "we profoundly regret [his] death."

The tone, rich in sorrowful and symathetic expressions, was aimed at assuring Western representatives that Moscow stood as one with them in the outpouring of humanitarian concern for the Swedish diplomat. To reinforce this sense of common humanitarian interest, Mr. Andreyev commented: "Our attitude towards him is positive, [and] we understand the importance of the cause which he had served." But one fact was continually underscored: Mr. Wallenberg was dead. Investigations by Mr. Andreyev's bureau unquestionably demonstrated that he had died in prison in 1947. Persistent reports that Mr. Wallenberg may still be alive were noting but "rumors."

If the Soviet official was categorical about Mr. Wallenberg's death, he had noting to offer in regard to the diplomat's mysterious arrest and subsequent death. "We know nothing new" about such matters, Mr. Andreyev commented. His associate, Ambassador Kashlev, then took the floor to explain that the officials responsible for "destroying such persons as Wallenberg, also destroyed the documents." As if to close the book on the investigation, Mr. Kashlev added that Moscow would make a full public disclosure "if, by magic, we were to obtain new information."

Magic, of course, is not a readily available tool to judicial investigators. Mr. Andreyev sought to downplay the uniqueness of the Wallenberg case; an attemt to thereby make it appear logical and reasonable that all the evidence could disappear. "Unfortunately, he was not alone," observed Mr. Andreyev, "Millions of others" similarly represent a "somber page" in Soviet history.

But the fact remains that the Wallenberg case was unique, and it is mystifying that a careful investigation could have thrown absolutely no light on his situation during the two full years that he was in the hands of his captors 1945 to 1947. In September 1988, statements by the chief of the Soviet delegation to the Vienna review conference of Helsinki signatories—Ambassador Kashlev—seemed to offer considerable hope for a major breakthrough on information in the Wallenberg case. After calling attention to Soviet efforts to remove stains from the historical past and to fill in the "blank spots," he promised that were any documentation uncovered with reference to Wallenberg, it would be made public. That commitment followed a heated airing in the Vienna plenary about the issue. U.S. Ambassador Warren Zimmerman called for "a full and open accounting of that part of Soviet history affecting a man who stood for so many of the Helsinki ideals to which we are dedicated."

Ambassador Zimmerman was quickly joined by the British and Canadian delegation in urging a Soviet investigation and disclosure. Of far greater significance was the fact that the leader of the Hungarian delegation, Andre Erdos, also rose to plead the Wallenberg case: "We would welcome with greater emotion any new information which would shed light on his (Wallenberg's) fate or (that would) complete our knowledge." It was the first time that a Hungarian ambassador, in a European public plenum, challenged Moscow.

The striking emotional appeals produced Soviet Ambassador Kashlev's commitment as well as his warm endorsement of Wallenberg's "noble activities." Several months later, optimism soared when the Soviet Ambassador to Belgium, Felix Bogdanov, showed up for a special ceremony honoring Mr. Wallenberg at Brussels' Egmont Palace. The sponsoring group was the Belgian Committee for Raoul Wallenberg. Never before had a Soviet official participated in a Wallenberg ceremony.

The event, held on January 19, 1989—the day that the Helsinki accord talks came to an end in Vienna—could not and did not go unnoticed. Mr. Wallenberg's half-brother, Guy von Dardel, told the Brussels gathering that "the presence of the Soviet Ambassador is a significant gesture that . . . gives us hope for a change in the Soviet attitude toward the Wallenberg case."

Hope for change plummeted a half year later at the Paris meeting. The warm embrace of Mr. Wallenberg as "noble" by Soviet officials could not hide the fact that this "blank spot" of Soviet history still remained "blank." Of even greater concern is the possibility that Moscow is engaged in a cover-up of a series of profoundly embarrassing developments.

Could it be that Wallenberg did in fact die in 1947 as the Soviets now insist? Numerous first-hand and indirect accounts purport seeing him in a Soviet gulag years later. How does one explain the arrest and disappearance of a foreign diplomat, and from a neutral country at that—an episode that is virtually unheard of in international diplomatic circles. How can all of the records of his arrest and incarceration and all of the eyewitnesses have vanished?

October 5 will mark the 8th anniversary of Mr. Wallenberg being made an honorary citizen of the United States, the only foreigner other than Winston Churchill to be afforded that distinction. Two weeks later, Soviet officials will host leaders of the Swedish Wallenberg committee in Moscow. At that time, the Soviet hosts will be hard pressed to come up with some solid answers to end the embarrassing mystery which engulfs their tales of what happened to Raoul Wallenberg.

GOOD HEALTH DAY—OCTOBER 8, 1989

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to join me in proclaiming October 8, 1989, as National "Good Health Day."

On that day, the first issue of the Good Health magazine will appear in five cities across the United States. The magazine is being produced as a cooperative effort by the Boston Globe, Chicago Tribune, Los Angeles Times, New York Times and the Washington Post.

The magazine will contain articles on psychology, fitness and health, nutrition, and medicine.

In conjunction with the first issue of the Good Health magazine, the Washington Post will be sponsoring a good health fair at the Ramada Renaissance Hotel at Techworld. The Washington Post will be offering health screening services free of charge that day for cholesterol, blood pressure and other things, and will have a drugmobile and "mom-mobile" at the fair. The mobiles will be provided by the D.C. Commission of Public Health.

Mr. Speaker, there is no more timely and compelling topic than the health of the citizens of this Nation, and I trust all Members will join me in declaring October 8, 1989, as national "Good Health Day."

ST. DENIS CHURCH OF GLEN LYON, PA, CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to St. Denis Church of Glen Lyon, PA, on the occasion of its centennial celebration.

St. Denis Church was founded as a Slovak Mission on October 8, 1889. For 37 years, priests from Nanticoke, PA, came by horse and buggy to serve the members of the congregation. In 1926 St. Denis' parish welcomed its first pastor, the Rev. Frank McHugh.

For the next 6 years, Reverend McHugh and the parishioners worked diligently together to establish and construct the present church. The foundation and walls were built by the men of the parish, while the upper part of the church was completed by a contractor.

Over the years, St. Denis' parish has generously offered its time and services to help those in need. For years before the Ruthenian Rite congregation was able to build a church of their own, they celebrated mass once a month at St. Denis Church. The church added Retreat State Hospital as a mission, and Father McHugh hiked over Glen Lyon Mountain to attend to the patients needs. These two acts are only two representations of the consistent kindness and generosity exhibited by St. Denis Church.

Over time, under the tenure of 11 different pastors, St. Denis Church has undergone many changes and improvements. Under the guidance of Rev. Leo V. Gilroy a new rectory was built. The church basement was renovated to make it suitable for social gatherings during Rev. Leo A. Granahan's tenure. The original pews built by the men of the parish were replaced by Rev. Edward L. Collins.

It was the generosity and industriousness of its members and the surrouding community that made it possible to build St. Denis Church. I hope that the next 100 years are as rewarding for St. Denis Church as the first 100.

SALUTE TO ARTISTIC IDENTIFICATION SYSTEMS, INC. OF POMPTON LAKES, NJ, ON ITS 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pride and admiration that I rise today to pay tribute to a truly outstanding company in my eighth District of New Jersey which, for the past century, has continually demonstrated excellence and innovation in a rapidly changing national and international textile market.

I am speaking of Artistic Identification Systems, Inc., which has its headquarters in Pompton Lakes, NJ, and also maintains operations in Pittsboro, NC and Holdrege, NE. In 1989, Artistic Identification Systems, Inc., is celebrating its 100th anniversary, an historic event that it is celebrating with an open house and dinner party at its Pompton Lakes facility on Saturday, October 7, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, as a means of providing the details of the rich history of this fine company, I would like to insert, for the Record, the official history of Artistic Identification Systems, Inc.:

The weaving tradition of Artistic Identification Systems, Inc. can be traced back to Friedrich Wilhelm Kluge (1798-1881) who lived in what was then the Kingdom of Saxony. His son Karl Friedrich Kluge having learned the weaving trade from his family, married into a family leaving business in Bielefeld located in western Saxony, an important silk and cotton fabric manufacturing center.

Karl later moved to Krefeld in the Rhineland, another important textile center, where he established his own factory weaving broadloom jacquard fabrics and narrow jacquard trimmings, the latter being the forerunners of the modern woven label.

After this death, his five sons expanded the business under the name of Gebrüder Kluge (Kluge Brothers).

To promote sales, one brother and founder of Artistic Adolph went to the United States in 1887, one to Italy, one to Sweden, one to Austria and one to Russia where most met and married native-born women.

In the United States, first operating as Kluge Brothers importing from the family firm in Krefeld and then out of a small factory on West Thirty-Fourth St. in New York City, Adolph subsequently bought the buildings and the dam, as a source of power, from the Smith Fuze Works along the Wanaque River in Pompton Lakes, New Jersey. Nearby Paterson, a major silk textile center, provided a source of skilled workers.

The company name became the German Artistic Weaving Company which was changed to the Artistic Weaving Company at the outbreak of World War I.

At his death in 1919, leadership fell to his elder son Albert because his younger son Willard showed little interest in the business.

Today, Albert's nephew Willard G. Kluge represents the third generation to head Artistic and the fourth generation is represented in the business by his younger son Christopher.

To meet the needs of the growing textile industry in the South, a second factory, Chatham Mills, Inc. was established in Pittsboro, Chatham County, North Carolina in 1926.

A third factory named Artistic Woven Labels, Inc. was built in Holdrege, Nebraska in 1962.

In 1970 Artistic began printing fabric labels under the name of Printex Labels, Inc. at Pompton Lakes and acquired the Electro-Seal Corp., a manufacturer of thermoplastic adhesives and heat sealing machines.

Because the word weaving in the company name was now too limiting, the name was changed to Artistic Identification Systems, Inc. in 1970.

Along the way, Artistic entered into a joint-venture label weaving operation in Mexico City, operated two yarn processing plants in North Carolina and two Schiffli embroidery factories in Guttenberg and Union City, New Jersey.

All have been disposed of to enable Artistic to concentrate on what it knows best, the making and selling of woven and printed fabric labels.

Having survived the decline in domestic apparel production due to the tremendous growth of imports, Artistic has turned the tables and is now shipping domestically-made labels to its distribution centers in Taiwan and Hong Kong.

While in a trade serving the low-growth American apparel and textile industries, Artistic is achieving above-average growth because of its recognized superior performance through the outstanding efforts and skills of its employees.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to present this profile of an outstanding company whose record of accomplishment, innovation, and endurance for a century have made it a model for businesses everywhere—Artistic Identification Systems, Inc., of Pompton Lakes, NJ, celebrating its 100th anniversary in 1989.

THE BILLBOARD CONTROL ACT OF 1989

HON. JOHN LEWIS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Billboard Control Act of 1989. I offer this legislation for two purposes: First, to remedy some very basic flaws in the Beautification Act of 1965, as amended. Second, to prohibit the construction of new billboards.

It is a travesty that, as a result of the efforts of the billboard industry, the Beautification Act of 1965 has been watered down. It was Mrs. Lady Bird Johnson's intent to beautify our Nation's highways. Instead, our highways are polluted by more billboards than ever before.

Mrs. Johnson's Beautification Act—as amended—has not discouraged the erection of billboards. In fact, it has made it easier for billboards to pollute our highways. To add insult to injury, the act now mandates that our Nation's taxpayers compensate billboard owners for doing what the law requires: the dismantling of illegal billboards.

Twenty-four years after the passage of the Beautification Act, the Federal Highway Administration reports that 138,000 nonconforming billboards still stand along our Federal-aid highways. The General Accounting Office and the Department of Transportation's Inspector General tell us that new billboards are being erected three times faster than old ones are coming down.

Perhaps that is why the Beautification Act is supported only by the billboard industry—the industry it was intended to regulate.

The billboard industry is the only industry in America exempted from the State's constitutional right to use amortization as a form of compensation. This special treatment comes at an enormous cost to our Government and to the taxpayers. The General Accounting Office estimates that the cash payments mandated by the 1965 Beautification Act, as amended, have cost taxpayers nearly $1 billion.

In an effort to restore the integrity of the Beautification Act, I have called for the restoration of certain key provisions.

Our bill is a revenue neutral way of addressing billboard pollution while giving the states and local jurisdictions greater regulatory control and flexibility in limiting billboards.

The bill calls for the following:

An outright moratorium on the construction of new billboards.

The dismantling of all nonconforming billboards in existence after October 1, 1994. The dismantling shall be done at the expense of the billboard owner.

An annual inventory of billboards on Federal aid roadways done by the States.

An annual report by the U. S. Department of Transportation of billboards on Federal aid highways based on the inventories prepared by the States.

Mr. Speaker, this distinguished body has attempted to repair this failed act on many occasions since its enactment in 1965. In 1987, amendments which strengthened the act were passed by both bodies of Congress, only to be dropped during the conference committee during the highway bill.

The control of billboards is an environmental issue. The control of billboards is a public health issue. The control of billboards is a State and local control issue.

The billboard industry has had far too much control over this issue for far too many years. It is time we give this control back to the States and local communities who are working diligently to control their environments.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join with me and the other original cosponsor of this legislation, Mr. CLAY SHAW in truly beautifying our Nation's highways.

A TIMELY REFLECTION ON WEBSTER

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, now that the Supreme Court is back in session, I would like to share with you an insightful article from the August-September issue of All About Issues. In the article, Prof. Charles

E. Rice details the significance of the Supreme Court's Webster decision issued on July 3, 1989. Webster, Professor Rice reminds us, is not the final word on abortion. It did not reverse Roe versus Wade. Preborn children are still nonpersons in the eyes of the Court. The protection of our great Constitution has still not been granted to these innocents.

In order to establish the constitutional grounds, once and for all, I introduced H.R. 623, the Declaration of Personhood Act, which would guarantee the protection of the preborn children under the 5th, 13th, and 14th amendments to the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage my colleagues to read Professor Rice's article and challenge them to remain vigilant in the battle for the lives of preborn children and an end to the American tragedy of abortion.

THE WEBSTER DECISION—AND BEYOND

(By Charles E. Rice)

The decision by the Supreme Court in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services is more an opportunity than a victory for the pro-life movement. On its facts and in its holdings the decision was very limited. With more exaggeration than justification, Justice Harry Blackmun's dissent described the plurality opinion of Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices White and Kennedy, as an "implicit invitation to every State to enact more and more restrictive abortion laws, and to assert their interest in potential life as of the moment of conception. All these laws will satisfy the plurality's nonscrutiny, until sometime, a new regime of old dissenters and new appointees will declare what the plurality intends: that Roe is no longer a good law."

Webster has indeed given the pro-life movement an opportunity. It should not press state legislatures to enact laws, not tinkering with abortion, but prohibiting it. However, though we must take advantage of this opportunity to save lives, we ought also to keep in mind that Webster is not really a pro-life decision. Every one of the five opinions endorses the view that the preborn child is a non-person who has no constitutional rights.

The essential holding of Roe v. Wade is that the preborn child is not a "person" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, which protects the right to life of persons. The Court in Roe held that abortion prohibitions unconstitutionally infringe upon the mother's "right to privacy"—which the Court interpreted, in effect, to protect her right to elective abortion in all three trimesters of pregnancy: In the first trimester the state may neither regulate nor prohibit abortion, except, for example, to require that the killing be done by a physician. In the second trimester, the state may not prohibit abortion but may regulate it to protect the mother's health. Only after viability, in the third trimester, may the state act to protect "potential life" by regulating and prohibiting abortion.

But even after viability, the Court said, the state may not prohibit abortion when it is sought to preserve the mother's life or health—including mental as well as physical health. This criterion is a practical sanction for abortion on request at every stage unitl delivery. Since 1973, the Court implemented Roe in a series of decisions which precluded the states from enforcing any effective prohibitions of abortion.

WHAT WEBSTER SAID

The Supreme Court decision in Webster involved the following Missouri statutes:

I. A finding in the preamble to a state abortion statute that "the life of each human being begins at conception" and that "unborn children have protectable interests in life, health and well-being."

Part IIA of the plurality opinion by Chief Justice Rehnquist held that the Court "need not pass on the constitutionality" of this provision because it may merely express a permissible "value judgment" by the State "favoring childbirth over abortion." Or it could be interpreted to protect the preborn child, not from abortion, but only with respect to State tort and probate laws. Justices O'Connor and Scalia joined in this part of the plurality opinion. The four dissenters would have held the preamble unconstitutional. The holding of the five-persons majority of the Court, however, is that the constitutionality of the preamble need not be decided.

II. Statutes making it "unlawful for any public employee within the scope of his employment to perform or assist an abortion, not necessary to save the life of the mother." Or "for any public facility to be used for the purpose of performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save the life of the mother."

Part IIB of the Rehnquist, White, Kennedy plurality opinion held these statutes in reliance on prior interpretations of Roe which has allowed states to withhold public funding and the use of public facilities for abortion. O'Connor and Scalia joined in this part of the plurality opinion. This is the only aspect of Webster on which a majority of the Court joined in a single opinion upholding any of the Missouri statutes. This opinion is based on Roe and its succeeding cases, although the dissenters argued that it contradicts those cases. The plurality opinion said that, "Nothing in the Constitution requires States to enter or remain in the business of performing abortions. Nor . . . do private physicians and their patients have some kind of constitutional right of access to public facilities for the performance of abortions." In a footnote, the plurality opinion said that, "A different analysis might apply if a particular State had socialized medicine and all of its hospitals and physicians were publicly funded. This case might also be different if the State barred doctors who performed abortions in private facilities from the use of public facilities for any purpose."

III. A Statute making it "unlawful for any public funds to be expended . . . for the purpose of encouraging or counselling a woman to have an abortion not necessary to save her life."

Part IIC of the plurality opinion held that the controversy over this statute was moot and therefore its constitutionality need not be decided, on account of the concession by Reproductive Health Services and the other appellees that their interests were not "adversely" affected by the operation of the statute which the State claimed was "not directed at the conduct of any physician or health care provider" but rather "solely at those persons responsible for expending public funds." All nine Justices concurred in this part of the plurality opinion.

IV. A requirement that a physician, in making a determination of viability in cases where "he has reason to believe" that the preborn child is 20 or more weeks gestational age, "shall perform or cause to be performed such medical examinations and tests as are necessary to make a finding of the gestational age, weight and lung maturity of the unborn child. . . ."

In prior cases, the Supreme Court has upheld the power of the states to require a determination of viability in such cases. The lower courts, however, held this Missouri statute unconstitutional because it interfered with the physician's professional judgment by required him to make specific tests.

In its Part IID, the plurality opinion construed this statute so as to be of doubtful validity under the prior cases:

"To the extent that [the statute] regulates the method for determining viability, it undoubtedly does superimpose state regulation on the medical determination of whether a particular fetus is viable. The court of Appeals and the District Court thought it unconstitutional for this reason. . . . To the extent that the viability tests increase the cost of what are in fact second-trimester abortions, their validity may also be questioned under [the 1983 Supreme Court decision in the Akron case], where the Court held that a requirement that second trimester abortions must be performed in hospitals was invalid because it substantially increased the expense of those procedures."

The plurality opinion responded to its expressed doubt about the consistency of the Missouri statute with the Roe trimester framework by rejecting, not the statute, but the trimester framework. The "doubt cast upon the Missouri statute" by prior cases following Roe, said the plurality, "is not so much a flaw in the statute as it is a reflection of the fact that the rigid trimester analysis of the course of a pregnancy enunciated in Roe has resulted in subsequent cases . . . making constitutional law in this area a virtual Procrustean bed." The plurality described the "Roe trimester framework" as "unsound in principle and unworkable in practice." The plurality said, "we do not see why the State's interest in protecting potential human life should come into existence only at the point of viability, and that there should therefore be a rigid line allowing state regulation after viability but prohibiting it before viability . . . [W]e are satisfied that the requirement of these tests permissibly furthers the State's interest in protecting potential human life, and we therefore believe [the statute] to be constitutional."

The plurality criticized the Roe trimester framework because it "sought to deal with areas of medical practice traditionally subject to state regulation, and it sought to balance once and for all by reference only to the calendar the claims of the State to protect the fetus as a form of human life against the claims of a woman to decide for herself whether or not to abort a fetus she was carrying. The experience of the Court in applying Roe v. Wade in later cases . . . suggests to us that there is wisdom in not unnecessarily attempting to elaborate the abstract difference between a "fundamental right" to abortion, as the Court described it in Akron . . . a "limited fundamental constitutional right," which Justice Blackmun's dissent today treats Roe as having established, . . . or a liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause, which we believe it to be. The Missouri resting requirement here is reasonably designed to ensure that abortions are not performed where the fetus is viable—and end which all concede is legitimate—and that is sufficient to sustain its constitutionality." [Emphasis added.]

Note that the plurality regards the right to kill a preborn child as "a liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause."

The plurality concluded its treatment of the viability statute by saying:

"There is no doubt that our holding today will allow some governmental regulation of abortion that would have been prohibited under the language of [prior] cases. . . . But the goal of constitutional adjudication is surely not to remove inexorably "politically divisive" issues from the ambit of the legislative process, whereby the people through their elected representatives deal with matters of concern to them. The goal of constitutional adjudication is to hold true the balance between that which the Constitutional puts beyond the reach of the democratic process and that which it does not. We think we have done that today. The dissent's suggestion . . . that legislative bodies, in a nation where more than half of our population is women, will treat our decision today, as an invitation to enact abortion regulation reminiscent of the dark ages not only misreads our view but does scant justice to those who serve in such bodies and the people who elect them."

The plurality opinion is hardly a ringing repudiation of Roe v. Wade, a fact underscored by the opinion's concluding paragraph:

"Both appellants and the United States as Amicus Curiae have urged that we overrule our decision in Roe v. Wade. . . . The facts of the present case, however, differ from those at issue in Roe. Here, Missouri has determined that viability is the point at which its interest in potential human life must be safeguarded. In Roe, on the other hand, the Texas statute criminalized the performance of all abortions, except where the mother's life was at stake. . . . This case therefore affords us no occasion to revisit the holding of Roe, which was that the Texas statute unconstitutionally infringed the right to an abortion derived from the Due Process Clause . . . and we leave it undisturbed. To the extent indicated in our opinion, we would modify and narrow Roe and succeeding cases."

Justices O'Connor and Scalia provided the fourth and fifth votes to uphold the Missouri viability statute, but neither joined in the plurality opinion on that statute. Therefore, the language quoted above from the plurality opinion on the viability statute does not have the impact of an opinion of the Court; it is the language only of the three members of the plurality.

Justice O'Connor argued that the viability statute, as interpreted by the plurality, was constitutional under the Roe trimester framework and therefore that the framework need not be rejected in order to uphold the statute. Justice O'Connor did note that "I continue to consider problematic" Roe's "trimester framework." But, Justice Scalia began his opinion by stating, "I share Justice Blackmun's view . . . that [the plurality opinion on the viability statute] effectively would overrule Roe v. Wade. . . . I think that should be done, but would do it more explicitly." Scalia said that the outcome in Webster . . .

". . . will doubtless be heralded as a triumph of judicial statesmanship. It is not that, unless it is statesmanlike needlessly to prolong this Court's self-awarded sovereignty over a field where it has little proper business since the answers to most of the cruel questions posed are political and not juridical—a sovereignty which therefore quite properly, but to the great damage of the Court, makes it the object of the sort of organized public pressure that political institutions in a democracy ought to receive."

ABORTION AS A "POLITICAL ISSUE"

Scalia's opinion emphasized abortion as a political issue. He wrote:

"Our retaining control, through Roe, of what I believe to be, and many of our citizens recognize to be, a political issue, continuously distorts the public perception of the role of this Court. We can now look forward to at least another Term with carts full of mail from the public, and streets full of demonstrators, urging us—their unelected and life-tenured judges who have been awarded those extraordinary, undemocratic characteristics precisely in order that we might follow the law despite the popular will—to follow the popular will. Indeed, I expect we can look forward to even more of that than before, given our indecisive decision today. And if these reasons for taking the unexceptional course of reaching a broader holding are not enough, then consider the nature of the constitutional question we avoid: In most cases, we do no harm by not speaking more broadly than the decision requires. . . . Not so with respect to the harm that many States believed, pre-Roe, and many may continue believe, is caused by largely unrestricted abortion. That will continue to occur if the States have the constitutional power to prohibit it, and would do so, but we skillfully avoid telling them so. Perhaps those abortions cannot constitutionally be proscribed. That is surely an arguable question, the question that reconsideration of Roe v. Wade entails. But what is not at all arguable, it seems to me, is that we should decide now and not insist that we be run into a corner before we grudgingly yield up our judgment. . . . It was an arguable question today whether [the viability statute] contravened . . . Roe v. Wade, and I would have examined Roe rather than examining the contravention. Given the Court's newly contracted abstemiousness, what will it take, one must wonder, to permit us to reach that fundamental question? The result of our vote today is that we will not reconsider that prior opinion, even if most of the Justices think it is wrong, unless we have before us a statute that in fact contradicts it—and even then . . . only minor problematical aspects of Roe will be reconsidered, unless one expects State legislators to adopt provisions whose compliance with Roe cannot even be argued with a straight face. It thus appears that the mansion of constitutionalized abortion-law, constructed overnight in Roe v. Wade, must be disassembled door-jamb by door-jamb, and never entirely brought down, no matter how wrong it may be."

It should be noted that when Justice Scalia and the other Justices talk about overruling Roe, they evidently mean allowing the states to decide whether to allow or prohibit abortion rather than actually overturning Roe on its essential holding that the preborn child is a non-person.

In his dissent, Justice Blackmun sharply criticized the plurality opinion as, among other things, "unadulterated nonsense." "Since, in the plurality's view," wrote Blackmun, "The State's interest in potential life is compelling as of the moment of conception, and is therefore served only if abortion is abolished, every hindrance to a woman's ability to obtain an abortion must be 'permissible.' Indeed, the more severe the hindrance, the more effectively (and permissibly) the State's interest would be furthered. A tax on abortions or a criminal prohibition would both satisfy the plurality's standard. So, for that matter, would a requirement that a pregnant woman memorize and recite today's plurality opinion before seeking an abortion."

Ironically, in a footnote, Justice Blackmun quoted from West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (the 1943 case that held a compulsory flag salute unconstitutional) the statement that, "One's right to life, liberty, and property . . . may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no election." With respect to the natural right to life of the preborn child, the four dissenters would submit that right to the vote of the Supreme Court and his mother; the other five would, at best, submit that right to the vote of state legislatures and the mother. In either case, the preborn child, as a non-person, is equally bereft of any constitutional right to life.

ABORTIFACIENTS AND LIFE'S BEGINNINGS

In his dissent, Justice Stevens argued that the preamble is unconstitutional. The preamble declared that life begins at "conception" which the statute defined as "the fertilization of the ovum of a female by a sperm of a male." Justice Stevens states that "standard medical texts equate 'conception' with implantation in the uterus, occurring about six days after fertilization. Missouri's declaration therefore implies regulation not only of previability abortions, but also of common forms of contraception such as the IUD and the morning-after pill." In a footnote, Justice Stevens said:

"An intrauterine device, commonly called an IUD, 'works primarily by preventing a fertilized egg from implanting.' . . . Other contraceptive methods that may prevent implantation include 'morning-after pills,' high dose estrogen pills taken after intercourse, particularly in cases of rape . . . and the French RU 486, a pill that works 'during the indeterminate period between contraception and abortion.' . . . Low-level estrogen 'combined' pills—a version of the ordinary, daily ingested birth control pill—also may prevent the fertilized egg from reaching the uterine wall and implanting. . . ."

Justice O'Connor, incidentally, appeared to agree with Justice Stevens in describing early abortifacients as a form of contraception. "It may be correct," said O'Connor 'that the use of postfertilization contraceptive devices is constitutionally protected by [the 1965 Griswold case "and its progeny" which held unconstitutional state restrictions on the use or distribution of contraceptives] but, as with a woman's abortion decision, nothing in the record or the opinions below indicates that the preamble will affect a woman's decision to practice contraception."

If a majority of the Court were to agree that early abortifacients are contraceptives, any allowance by the Court of restrictions on abortion by the states would be rendered meaningless with respect to the early abortions which will be the usual abortions in the near future. Justice Stevens alluded to this issue:

"One might argue that the Griswold holding applies to devices 'preventing conception,' . . .—that is, fertilization—but not to those preventing implantation, and therefore, that Grisworld does not protect a woman's choice to use an IUD or take morning-after pill. There is unquestionably a theological basis for such an argument . . . just as there was unquestionably a theological basis for the Connecticut statute that the Court invalidated in Grisworld. Our jurisprudence, however, has consistently required a secular basis for valid legislation . . . Because I am not aware of any secular basis for differentiating between contraceptive procedures that are effective immediately before and those that are effective immediately after fertilization, I believe it inescapably follows that the preamble to the Missouri statute is invalid under Grisworld and its progeny. Indeed, I am persuaded that the absence of any secular purpose for the legislative declarations that life begins at conception and that conception occurs at fertilization makes the relevant portion of the preamble invalid under the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the Federal Constitution. This conclusion does not, and could not rest on the fact that the statement happens to coincide with the tenets of certain religions . . . or on the fact that the legislators who voted to enact it may have been motivated by religious considerations . . . Rather, it rests on the fact that the preamble, an unequivocal endorsement of a religious tenet of some but by no means all Christian faiths . . . serves no identifiable secular purpose."

Stevens thus regards the claim that life begins at fertilization as merely a "theological" position. He continues:

"My concern can best be explained by reference to the position on this issue that was endorsed by St. Thomas Aquinas and widely accepted by the leaders of the Roman Catholic Church for many years. . . . 'The disagreement over the status of the unformed as against the formed fetus was crucial for Christian teaching on the soul. It was widely held that the soul was not present until the formation of the fetus 40 or 80 days after conception, for males and females respectively. Thus, abortion of the "unformed" or "unanimate" fetus (from anima, soul) was a something less than true homicide, rather a form of anticipatory or quasihomicide. This view received its definite treatment in St. Thomas Aquinas and became for a time the dominant interpretation in the Latin Church.". . . If the views of St. Thomas were held as widely today as they were in the Middle Ages, and if a state legislature were to enact a statute prefaced with a 'finding' that female life begins 80 days after conception and male life begins 40 days after conception, I have no doubt that this Court would promptly conclude that such an endorsement of a particualr religious tenet is violative of the Establishment Clause. In my opinion the difference between that hypothetical statute and Missouri's preamble relects nothing more than a difference in theological doctrine. The preamble . . . endorses the theological position that there is the same secular interest in preserving the life of a fetus during the first 40 or 80 days of pregnancy as there is after viability—indeed, after the time when the fetus has become a 'person' with legal rights protected by the Constitution."

This curious digression on St. Thomas is relevant because it illustrates a common technique used to obscure the fact that every abortion kills a human being. The technique is to dismiss the assertion of that fact as the expression of a merely theological belief. St. Thomas knew nothing of the ovum and the process of fertilization and gestation. His lack of modern scientific knowledge led him to conclude that human life began and ensoulment took place, not at conception, but some time later, probably forty days later for males and eighty days for females. He concluded that abortion was not homicide until ensoulment, although he regarded abortion at every stage as a grave sin. (See Grisez, Abortion: The Myths, The Realities and The Arguments (1970), 154-55; Noonan, "An Almost Absolute Value in History," in Noonan (ed.) The Morality of Abortion: Legal and Historical Perspectives (1970), 1, 22-26; Gerber, "When Is the Human Soul Infused?", 22 Laval Theologique et Philosophique 234, 236 (1966).) Aquinas based his position on the science of his day, which we now know to be wrong. Yet Stevens continues his strange analysis:

"[T]he Constitution allows the use of contraceptive procedures to prevent potential life from developing into full personhood. Focusing our attention on the first several weeks of pregnancy is especially appropriate because that is the period when the vast majority of abortions are actually performed.

"As a secular matter, there is an obvious difference between the state interest in protecting the freshly fertilized egg and the state interest in protecting a 9-month-gestated, fully sentient fetus on the eve of birth. There can be no interest in protecting the newly fertilized egg from physical pain or mental anguish, because the capacity for such suffering does not yet exist; respecting a developed fetus, however, that interest is valid."

". . . . Contrary to the theological 'finding' of the Missouri Legislature, a woman's constitutionally protected liberty encompasses the right to act on her own belief that—to paraphrase St. Thomas Aquinas—until a seed has acquired the powers of sensation and movement, the life of a human being has not yet begun."

HIDDEN DANGER

These references to "the powers of sensation and movement" and the "capacity" for "suffering" and to experience "physical pain or mental anguish" are relevant in light of the Supreme Court's decision to review Cruzan v. Harmon, a Missouri right-to-die case. If human life does not begin until one has "the powers of sensation and movement," would that life be decreed to be at an end for the adult comatose or vegetative patient who no longer had those powers? Interestingly, Justice Blackmun wrote in his opinion:

"In answering the plurality's claim that the State's interest in the fetus is uniform and compelling throughout pregnancy, I cannot improve upon what Justice Stevens has written: "I should think it obvious that the State's interest in the protection of an embryo . . . increases progressively and dramatically as the organism's capacity to feel pain, to experience pleasure, to survive, and to react to its surroundings increases day by day. The development of a fetus—and pregnancy itself—are not static conditions, and the assertion that the government's interest is static simply ignores this reality.' "

The unspoken issue here is whether the state's interest decreases "progressively and dramatically" at the other end of life as the capacity to experience pleasure and pain and to react decreases.

THE KEY ISSUE: PERSONHOOD

Justice Stevens deserved credit for candor because he is the only member of the Court who has persistently and explicitly raised the personhood issue. In the 1986 Thornburgh case, he wrote that, "unless the religious view that a fetus is a 'person' is adopted . . . there is a fundamental and well-recognized difference between a fetus and a human being, indeed, if there is not such a difference, the permissibility of terminating the life of a fetus could scarcely be left to the will of the state legislatures." The states' rights position on abortion is based on the premise that the preborn child is a non-person. This is so because the status of personhood clearly carries with it a right to the protection of the law, especially with respect to the right to life. The Supreme Court indicated in Roe v. Wade itself that if the preborn child is a person the state could not allow abortion even to save the life of the mother. (Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. at 157, n.54.) And Justice Stevens, in Webster, made the point again:

"No member of this Court has ever questioned the holding in Roe . . . that a fetus is not a 'person' within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. Even the dissenters in Roe implicitly endorsed that holding by arguing that state legislatures should decide whether to prohibit or to authorize abortions. . . . By characterizing the basic question as 'a political issue,' . . Justice Scalia likewise implicitly accepts this holding."

This last is a fitting quotation upon which to close this summary of the Webster decision. The key issue, as it has always been, is personhood. In any free and just society, there is an indispensable connection between humanity and personhood. The denial of personhood was the legal technique by which the Nazis set the Jews on the road to the gas chambers. And that denial was integral to the Dred Scott decision of the Supreme Court in 1857. When the Fourteenth Amendment reversed Dred Scott, its protection of persons was understood to extend to all human beings. In the line of cases from Roe through Webster, however, the Supreme Court denied the status of personhood to human beings before birth. The denial of personhood applies, in the Court's view, whether or not the preborn child is a human being; it is the same, in effect, therefore, as a flat holding that an acknowledged human being is a non-person. Of course, if you can deny the personhood of the preborn child you can do the same thing to his elder retarded brother or his grandmother. If an innocent human being is subject to execution at the discretion of another, he is, in the most important respect, a non-person. Not surprisingly, the right to execute the retarded and some incompetent patients by starvation and dehydration is already well established in the courts. The next step will be the painless injection to spare the victim suffering and to hasten his demise; an intimation of this can be seen in the growing medical practice of participating in the "assisted suicide" of AIDS patients. (See New York Times, May 24, 1989, p. 1, col. 2.)

WEBSTER: WINDOW OF OPPORTUNITY—OR CORRUPTING INFLUENCE

The Supreme Court appears to be in the process of turning over the issue of abortion to the state legislatures. This is not surprising because, as Justice Stevens noted, every member of the Court evidently agrees that the preborn child is a non-person. Scalia and Kennedy, upon whom the pro-life movement put so much hope, are like all the rest in this respect. The Court will allow state legislatures to enact at least marginal restrictions on surgical abortions but only at the time when those abortions are becoming obsolete because of the new early abortifacient drugs and devices.

The law is an educator. And the experience of debating in state legislatures as to which innocent human beings will be subject to execution, and according to what formalities the deed will be done, will further desensitize the people to legalized murder and will inhibit the restoration of conviction that all life is precious because it comes from God and that, as Pope John Paul II said at the Capitol Mall in 1979, "no one ever has the authority to destroy unborn life." Unless that conviction is restored widely among the American people, there will be no chance of enacting the licensing and other restrictions and prohibitions of the use of early abortifacients.

The Webster decision can be a window of opportunity for the pro-life movement. Or it can be a corrupting influence. We have a priceless opportunity to save lives if we go into state legislatures and insist, without compromise, that preborn babies must never be legally executed. But the decision will have a corrupting effect if the political compromisers in the movement dominate the activity in the legislatures, wheeling and dealing with preborn lives as they would with a highway appropriation. Some figures in the movement will predictably respond to Webster by seeking only whatever incremental legislation they think the Court would be likely to approve. They will regard it as a great victory if, years later, some of their marginal restrictions on baby killing are approved by the Court. In the meantime, this piecemeal, compromising approach will corrupt the public mind and will preclude any effective reaction against early abortifacients.

PARTIAL LINE-ITEM VETO

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, Presidents of both parties in recent decades have supported the concept of a partial Presidential veto of acts of Congress or, more specifically, line-item vetoes of individual appropriations within general appropriations acts.

Within the Congress there have been divergent views, although the majority has supported a position going back to our Nation's first President that an act of Congress presented to the President for approval or disapproval must be vetoed in whole or not at all.

I have adhered to that view, but my predecessor as Representative of the Second District of Arizona, my brother Stewart L Udall, once testified in support of the line-item veto during hearings held in the Presidency of Dwight D. Eisenhower.

My attention was recently drawn to a scholarly article written by an Illinois attorney, Anthony Haswell, entitled "Partial Veto Power—Does the President Have It Now?" which was published in the March-April edition of the Federal Bar News & Journal. It is a well-researched article that deserves the attention of everyone who may have to address this question in this Congress or subsequent ones.

Mr. Haswell discusses the difference in definition of the words "bill" and "act" as they relate to legislation, a bill being a legislative measure as introduced, and an act being the finished product passed by both the House and Senate and sent to the President for signature or veto. If vetoed, the act can become law, of course, if both the House and Senate vote to override by a two-thirds majority in each. The veto power is addressed in article I, section 7 of the U.S. Constitution.

"Bills" which are combined in one "act," such as separate appropriations contained within a supplemental appropriations act, are subject to "line-item veto", Mr. Haswell argues. He writes: "The Supreme Court once stated that '[t]he power to disapprove necessarily include the power to condition an approval.' Hence, the power to disapprove in whole necessarily includes the lesser power to disapprove in part."

He addresses in detail the concern that such actions might lead to conflict with the doctrine of the separation of powers and concern over where such changes in accepted procedure might take us.

"To the extent that such concerns are valid," Mr. Haswell continues, "it is submitted that the critics are aiming at the wrong end of the problem. Rather than focusing on the scope of the President's power to veto, they should address the constitutional requirement of a two-thirds vote for a congressional override. Were the Supreme Court to sanction partial vetoes, an amendment resolution calling for a simple majority for overrides would be a more appropriate response by Congress than an attempt to restore the status quo. In return for giving up the power to require that any act of Congress must be passed by a two-thirds vote [assuming the veto], the President could compel a rollcall vote on any rider or item of appropriation, many of which would not pass."

Mr. Speaker, while I expect to continue to oppose any legislation to give congressional assent to a President's use of the line-item veto, Mr. Haswell has raised several interesting questions, and I urge my colleagues to read his arguments carefully.

PARTIAL VETO POWER—DOES THE PRESIDENT HAVE IT NOW?

(By Anthony Haswell)

(Anthony Haswell is a member of the Illinois bar, is a paralegal with the firm of Mayer, Brown and Platt, in Chicago, Illinois, and is a member of the Federal Bar Association)

Article I, Section 7 of the United States Constitution empowers the President to veto a "bill" passed by Congress. It is the contention of this article first, that separately introduced legislative proposals contained in the same Act of Congress presented to the President are separately vetoable "bills;" second, that separate legislative proposals in substance contained in the same Act are separately vetoable "bills" regardless of the format or timing of introduction; and third, that the power to veto a bill in whole necessarily includes the power to veto a bill in part. The power of partial veto is limited, but not barred, by the separation of powers principle. Thus the President's veto power now extends both to separable "riders" attached to appropriations and to other legislation, as well as distinct items of appropriation contained in appropriations bills.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

During colonial days the King of England and his appointed governors had an absolute veto over colonial legislation. Excessive use of this power was one grievance contained in the Declaration of Independence. The Articles of Confederation provided for no separate executive branch of government, and therefore no executive veto power. Then the pendulum swung the other way.

Dissatisfaction with the weakness inherent in such a governmental structure led to the Constitutional Convention of 1787. The convention debates focused on whether the veto power was to be absolute or qualified (subject to congressional override); whether the power could be exercised by the President acting alone; and whether an override would require a majority, two-thirds, or three-fourths vote. There was no discussion of vetoes of parts of bills by the President at the time he signed the remainder into law.[1] Article I, Section 7 as adopted is as follows:

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approves, he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by Yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by the Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Article I, Section 7 does not specifically prohibit a partial veto, and no President has ever attempted one. In 1793 President Washington wrote that:

You do me no more than Justice when you suppose that from motives of respect to the Legislature (and I might add from my interpretation of the Constitution) I give my Signature to many Bills with which my judgment is at variance. In declaring this, however, I allude to no particular Act. From the nature of the Constitution, I must approve all the parts of a Bill, or reject it in toto. To do the latter can only be justified upon the clear and obvious ground of propriety; and I never had such confidence in my own faculty of judging as to be over tenacious of the opinions I may have imbibed in doubtful cases.[2]

Ever since Washington's time, courts and constitutional scholars have assumed that the President must either sign the whole bill as presented to him or return it in toto to the Congress.[3] However, the public policy consequences of this restrictive interpretation have been frequently criticized over the past century.

Around 1820, Congress began the now-familiar practice of attaching nongermane "riders"—amendments containing separate and unrelated legislative proposals—to both appropriations bills and to bills containing other essential legislation.[4] Typically the principal bill is popular, with broad support in Congress, while the amendment is for the benefit of a narrow group and contrary to public interest. Often, it is impossible as a practical matter for the President to veto the whole bill, e.g., one containing vital appropriations, or an increase in the federal debt limit.[5] Hence undesirable riders which get attached to such legislation are "veto-proof."[6]

Past presidents have strongly objected to this legislative tactic. In 1879 President Hayes asserted in his diary:

This is a controversy which cannot and ought not to be compromised. The Revolutionists claim that a bare majority in the House of Representatives shall control all legislation, by tacking the measures they can't pass through the Senate, or over the President's objections, to the appropriation bills which are required to carry on the government. . . . [I]t is idle to talk of compromises as to the particular measures which are used as riders on the appropriations bills. These measures may be wise or unwise. It is easy enough to say in regard to them, that used as they are to establish a doctrine which overthrows the Constitutional distribution of power between the different departments of the government, and consolidates in the House of Representatives, the whole law making power of the government . . . we will not discuss or consider them when they are so presented. . . . To tack political legislation to appropriation bills and to threaten that no appropriations will be made unless the political measures are approved is not in my judgment constitutional conduct.[7]

In a veto message, President Hayes described such congressional tactics as "[striking] from the Constitution the qualified negative of the President."[8] In 1912, President Taft expressed similar views in a message accompanying his veto of an appropriation bill to which an undesirable rider had been attached:

The dangers inherent in the practice of attaching substantive legislation to appropriation bills have frequently been pointed out by my predecessors. . . . Taken as a whole, it would be hard to conceive of a clearer instance of an attempt to force upon the Executive, legislation well known to be disapproved of by him, and, by attaching such legislation to one of the great supply of bills of the Government, to deprive the President of his constitutional power as to legislation. There can be no consitutional defense to such a practice.[9]

In addition to the abuses of "riders," criticism of the assumed inflexibility of the veto power has focused on the President's inability to veto individual "line items" of appropriation contained in omnibus appropriations bills. During the congressional appropriations process, so-called "pork barrel" appropriations items, of benefit only to some narrow interest in an individual Member's state or district, are frequently included in appropriations bills through the practice of "log-rolling." Members of congressional appropriations committees will often support a colleague's "pork" item for reciprocal support for the Members' own pet projects. After an appropriations bill is reported for floor action, the floor leadership may accept additional "pork" as amendments, which are not voted on separately. Sometimes essential appropriations, clearly in the national interest, are held back, contingent upon obtaining an agreement to include certain "pork." The end result is that items of appropriation which might not pass if voted on separately are nevertheless enacted as part of the larger package.[10]

As was one stated by the Supreme Court:

Provisions granting power to the executive to veto an item or items of an appropriation bill are to be found in various forms of expression in many of the state constitutions. Their object is to safeguard the public treasury against the pernicious effect of what is called "log-rolling"—by which, in order to secure the requisite majority to carry necessary and proper items of appropriation, unnecessary or even indefensible items are sometimes included.[11]

A Gallup poll of November 1983 reported that 67 percent of the voters nationwide favor granting item veto power for the President—a strong majority that has remained fairly constant since 1945.[12]

Beginning with President Grant, a number of presidents including President Reagan have advocated a constitutional amendment to provide specifically for item veto power.[13] From time to time since the Civil War, resolutions have been introduced in Congress proposing such an amendment, but none were passed and sent to the states for ratification.[14]

More recently, it has been suggested that Congress could give the President item veto power by appropriate legislation without the necessity of a constitutional amendment. On several occasions beginning in 1938, bills to that end have been introduced in Congress, but none has been enacted.[15] The latest attempt was Senate Bill 43, introduced in January 1985, which required that each item of appropriation contained in any appropriation bill be treated by the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate as a separate bill subject to veto separately by the President.[16] While President Reagan endorsed the bill in his state of the Union message and the bill was reported to the floor of the Senate,[17] passage was blocked by a "filibuster."[18]

It seems unlikely that Congress will voluntarily surrender, either through legislation or through a constitutional amendment, its present power to tie the President's hands through riders and omnibus appropriations. Constitutional amendments, like legislation, must originate in Congress unless a convention is called by the state legislatures. No such convention has taken place since the Constitution was ratified. Hence it is appropriate to consider whether the President has partial veto power under the Constitution as it is presently written.

SEPARATELY INTRODUCED LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS CONTAINED IN THE SAME ACT ARE SEPARATELY VETOABLE "BILLS"

The delegates to the Constitutional Convention in 1787 approved the following resolution: "That the national Executive shall have a Right to negative any legislative Act, which shall not be afterwards passed, unless by two-third Parts of the national Legislative." The matter was referred to the Committee of Detail, which drafted the language ultimately adopted by the convention as Article I, Section 7.[19] The adopted language empowers the President to veto a "Bill" rather than an "Act."

"Bill" is not defined in the Constitution, nor has it been defined by the Supreme Court. Recourse is therefore necessary to federal and state appellate decisions and to the dictionary. These sources indicate that there are crucial distinctions between "bill" and "act." Judicial interpretations of "bill" include the following:

A bill is a draft of a proposed statute submitted to the legislature for enactment. It cannot become a law by the action of the Senate alone, or of the Assembly alone, but only by the action of both, when it becomes an act of the legislature, subject to the approval of the governor.[20]

A bill is the draft or form of an act presented to the legislature, but not enacted. An "act" is the appropriate term for it after it has been acted on by, and passed, the legislature. It is then something more than a draft or form. It has a legal existence as "an act" of the legislative body, because it becomes law, without further action from any other branch of the government, if the executive takes no measures to prevent it.[21]

[A bill is] not the final product of the legislative will, not the statute, but a project for a statute, which may by amendment take a very different shape by the time it is ready for promulgation as a law.[22]

Webster's Third New International Dictionary (1961) has this to offer:

Bill—a draft of a law presented to a legislative for enactment; a proposed or projected law.

Act—the formal product of a legislative body; the formally declared will of a legislature the final requirement of which is usually the signature of the proper executive officer.

Article I, Section 7 does not mention "acts." It speaks only of "bills." Moreover, it calls for the return of the bill to the House "in which it shall have originated." Thus, the language of the Constitution indicates that for purposes of Article I, Section 7, "bill" means any portion of an Act of Congress which was originally introduced in the House of Senate as a separate and distinct legislative proposal.[23] It should make no difference whether the "bill" was originally dropped into the hopper, or was presented as an amendment to other legislation and attached thereto as a "rider." To the extent that an act contains two or more separate "bills," each of them may be separately vetoed.

This interpretation of "bill" derives added support from the legislative process of Congress in the early years after ratification of the Constitution, which presumably reflects the process that was contemplated by the framers. Almost all of the early acts of Congress, other than appropriations measures, were confined to a single subject.[24] The now-familiar practice of attaching non-germane riders to appropriations and other bills did not begin until 1820 and did not become common until about the time of the Civil War.[25] Hence, it is likely that the framers assumed that separate proposals for general legislation would be enacted as separate acts, with the President having an opportunity to veto each such proposal.[26]

It has recently been suggested that exclusive congressional power to define the contents of a "bill" for purposes of the veto power is contained in Article I, Section 5, which empowers each House of Congress to determine the rules of its own proceedings.[27] However, in a line of decisions beginning in 1929, the Supreme Court has made clear that Congress cannot affect the scope of the veto power, which was constitutionally granted to the President by Article I, Section 7.

In the "Pocket Veto" case, the Supreme Court held that Congress cannot, by adjourning its session after presenting a bill to the President but before expiration of the ten-day period for signature or veto, force the President to take less than the full ten days to decide whether or not to veto. "The (veto) power thus conferred upon the President cannot be narrowed or cut down by Congress."[28] This principle has been reinforced by several later decisions. Congress may not frustrate the veto power by taking strategically scheduled recesses, as such recesses do not prevent the return of the vetoed bill to the house of origin.[29] Nor may Congress cut down on the ten-day period for the President's signature or veto by sending him a bill when he is out of the country on official business; the time period does not begin to run until he returns. Finally, in the 1983 "Legislative Veto" case,[30] the Supreme Court invalidated an attempt by Congress to empower one of its House to enact a resolution reversing an administrative rule-making decision. The Court held that such a procedure would wrongfully deprive the President of an opportunity to veto the resolution.[31]

It follows from all these decisions that the President's constitutional power to veto "bills" cannot be impaired or nullified by the action of Congress under color of Article I, Section 5 of combining two or more "bills" in one "act" and presenting the President with the choice of either signing all the bills into law or vetoing all of them. The exercise of the veto power by the President is not a proceeding of either the House or the Senate.[32]

Were the definition of "bill" here advocated to be adopted by the Supreme Court, the President would be able to separately veto distinct legislative proposals initially introduced in separate bills and later combined in the same "act." He would also be able to separately veto "riders" attached as floor amendments to appropriation, tax, and other legislation.

SEPARATE LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS IN SUBSTANCE CONTAINED IN THE SAME ACT ARE SEPARATELY VETOABLE "BILLS"

The previous analysis of "bill" as that term is used in Article I, Section 7 is grounded upon the format and timing of the introduction of legislative proposals. No matter how separate and distinct two or more proposals may be in fact, they could not be separately vetoed if they were introduced at the same time under the same bill number or in the same amendment. It follows that the definition of a vetoable bill would still depend to some extent upon the practice and procedure of Congress.

While achieving "veto-proof" legislation would be more difficult than at present, in that the merger would have to take place before introduction rather than any time thereafter prior to final passage, it could still be done with sufficient advance planning. Were Congress determined to shield a given proposal from a veto, it could see that it was introduced together under the same bill number with another or other proposals which as a practical matter could not be vetoed. And, of course, Congress could continue its present practice of introducing many separate items of appropriation in a single bill.

In a letter to a colleague in 1937, Rep. W. Sumners, Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee and a constitutional law expert whose views commanded the respect of the Supreme Court in three major cases involving the President's veto power,[33] asserted:

Does the word "bill" necessarily mean all the separate items assembled under one caption, each of which might have been the subject matter of a separate bill but which for convenience sake in expediting the public's business are assembled under one caption? It is clear that the sole purpose of this section is to make certain that no item of proposed legislation shall be law until it is approved by the President, or, if disapproved by the President, is again passed by both Houses by two-thirds vote, the objections of the President notwithstanding.

To hold that the word "bill" necessarily means all the items assembled under one caption would be a construction operative against the purpose and plan of the Constitution. That construction would compel the President officially to approve items which he does not in fact approve in order to avoid striking down other items which he does approve. On the other hand, such a construction would force him to disapprove items which in fact he does approve in order to reach other items which he disapproves.[34]

The practice of Congress in combining many and diverse items of appropriation in "supplemental" appropriations bills demonstrates that individual items contained in regular departmental appropriations bills are separate and distinct legislative proposals, and hence are separate "bills" for purposes of Article I, Section 7.

It follows that the definition of "bill" should be based upon the substance of each and every separate and distinct legislative proposal contained within an Act sent to the President rather than upon the format and timing of introduction of those proposals.[35] Under this interpretation, Congress could not frustrate the veto power by skillful merger of proposals prior to introduction, and the President would be able to separately veto separate and distinct items of appropriations contained in omnibus appropriations bills.

Even if it is assumed that a "bill" for purposes of Article I, Section 7 is nothing less than an entire Act presented to the President, it does not necessarily follow that the President cannot separately veto a distinct legislative proposal contained within a larger bill. The Constitution does not specifically prohibit partial vetoes.[36] It is a judicially recognized maxim that the greater power includes the lesser.[37] The Supreme Court once stated that "[t]he power to disapprove necessarily includes the power to condition an approval." [38] Hence, the power to disapprove in whole necessarily includes the lesser power to disapprove in part.

If four separate bills were simultaneously presented to the President and he vetoed two of them, that would be a lesser exercise of power than if he vetoed all four. It follows that the same should be true were the identical pieces of legislation included in one bill and the President vetoed two if the four separate parts.

Regardless of which theory is accepted in support of partial vetoes, such a veto must not result in the amendment or change of the remainder of the act which is not vetoed. That is because the doctrine of separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches forbids the President from exercising affirmative legislative power.

Separation of power between the President, Congress, and the courts is a key element of federal constitutional law. In determining whether the action of one branch of government violates the separation of powers doctrine, inquiry first focuses on whether that action threatens to prevent another branch "from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions." When there is a "potential for disruption" of those functions, it must then be determined whether such disruption "is justified by the overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional power" of the branch whose exercise of power is challenged.[39] Affirmative legislative power is vested exclusively in the Congress by Article I, Section 1.

The Founders of this Nation entrusted the lawmaking power to the Congress alone in both good and bad times. It would do no good to recall the historical events, the fears of power, and the hopes for freedom that lay behind their choice.[40]

While in the exercise of the veto power under Article I, Section 7, the President does participate in the legislative process,[41] the veto is only a "qualified negative."[42]

It is submitted that a partial veto would not violate the separation of powers principle if it simply negated a distinct and separable legislative proprosal rather than changing or altering it. Such a veto would not disrupt or threaten to prevent Congress from accomplishing its legislative functions any more than would a veto of a whole bill containing only a single subject. It would not be an exercise of affirmative legislative power by the President. It follows that a veto of a separable rider or item of appropriation should not be barred by the separation of powers.

President Washington's belief that "the nature of the Constitution" permitted no partial vetoes [43] was probably based on concern about the separation of powers. Since most of the Acts of Congress in the early years were confined to single subjects,[44] it is likely that the objectionable parts of bills which Washington felt he could not veto were parts of integral, unified pieces of legislation which could not be vetoed without resulting in alteration or change in the remainder.

CONCLUSION

The President now has the power to veto part of an Act presented to him by Congress. This power may be sustained on any of three different theories: first, any separately introduced legislative proposal contained within an Act is a vetoable "bill;" second, any legislative proposal separate and distinct in substance contained within an Act is a vetoable "bill;" and third, the power to veto a bill in whole includes the power to veto a bill in part.

While this article contends that partial vetoes by the President are constitutionally permissible, it has not attempted to resolve the accompanying public policy considerations. One author maintains that the President already has too much power over the legislative process by means of the veto as it is presently interpreted, and hence congressional resort to procedural devices such as "riders" should be applauded rather than discouraged.[45] Others assert that such an imbalance would be created were the veto power extended to riders [46] and to items of appropriations.[47]

To the extent that such concerns are valid, it is submitted that the critics are aiming at the wrong end of the problem. Rather than focusing on the scope of the President's power to veto, they should address the constitutional requirement of a two-thirds vote for a congressional override. Were the Supreme Court to sanction partial vetoes, an amendment resolution calling for a simple majority for overrides would be a more appropriate response by congress than an attempt to restore the status quo.[48] In return for giving up the power to require that any Act of Congress must be passed by a two-thirds vote, the President could compel a roll-call vote on any rider or item of appropriation, many of which would not pass. In return for giving up the power of enacting riders and items of appropriation which might not pass if voted upon separately, the congressional leadership would be assured that any specific piece of general legislation or item of appropriation which commanded majority support on its own merits would become law.

Win or lose, the President stands to gain by attempting a partial veto. the "bully pulpit" of the Presidency would be illuminated by the glow of publicity arising out of the constitutional litigation which would likely ensue, creating an opportunity to educate the public on the issues involved. As a consequence, even if the Supreme Court ruled against the President, the chances would be enhanced for ultimate favorable action on a constitutional amendment specifically authorizing item or other partial vetoes.

[3] See Item Veto, supra note 1, at 110 n.22; L. Koenig, The Chief Executive 136 (1968). There is only one reported case of an attempted partial veto by a state or territorial governor under a constitution or "organic law" which, like the federal Constitution, contained no specific provision for an item veto. In 1887, the governor of Arizona Territory vetoed an item of appropriation for judicial salaries contained in a general appropriation act. The veto was nullified by the territorial Supreme Court:

"By the organic act referred to, whatever the governor may do in the premises has reference to a bill in its entirety, and not to any of its parts. A bill is approved as a whole or disapproved as a whole." Porter v. Hughes, 32 P. 165, 166 (Ariz. 1893). The court advanced no further rationale for its position.

In 1933, the Governor-General of the Philippines vetoed one section of a twelve-section bill providing for retirement pay. The veto was attempted to be sustained under the specific item veto power provided in the Organic Act for the territory. The United States Supreme Court stated, without further elaboration, that the "usual and general veto power" provided in the Act "requires the veto to include the whole bill." The Court held that the item veto power could not be used by the Governor-General to amend or change a unified piece of legislation. Bengzon v. Secretary of Justice, 299 U.S. 410, 412 (1937).

[6] A recent illustration is the $370 billion "stopgap" spending act presented to President Reagan by Congress in October 1984. The act contained funds for several major departments of the government for fiscal year 1985. Were it to be vetoed in whole, ongoing government operations could have been crippled. However, also included in the act was a major revision of the federal criminal justice system. This has been a controversial and politically sensistive question, quite unrelated to annual funding of the government. It is easy to envision provisions being included which would stimulate a presidential veto. Yet under prevailing assumptions about the veto power, Congress had effectively "veto-proofed" the criminal justice bill by attaching it to the urgent funding legislation. See Wall St. J., Oct. 12, 1984, at 2, col. 3. The same considerations are applicable to the $576 million "omnibus" appropriations act of 1986, to which was attached a provision granting anti-trust exemptions to beer distributors, and to an $11 billion supplemental appropriations bill considered by the House in 1987, to which were attached two provisions on arms control negotiations. See Wall St. J., Apr. 24, 1987, at 44, col. 1; id., Oct. 2, 1986, at 28, col. 1.

[32] The recent effort in Congress to enact S. 43, see supra notes 16-18 and accompanying text, was constitutionally grounded on the power of Congress to define "bill" under Acticle I, Section 5. See Statement of Prof. Judith A. Best, State University College, Cortland, N.Y., Line Item Veto: Hearings on S. 43 Before the S. Comm. on Rules and Administration, 99th Cong., 1st Sess. 37 (1985). However, S. 43 did not define "bill" in a manner limiting and circumscribing the exercise of the veto power. It would, if anything, have procedurally facilitated its exercise. Hence, it would have been no more an intrusion into the President's veto power under Article I. Section 7 than were each and every item of appropriation introduced into Congress as a separate bill with its own bill number enacted as a separate act. See Killian, supra note 4, at 20.

A SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY FOR NORTHEASTERN PENNSYLVANIA'S SUNDAY INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to inform my colleagues that October 8, 1989, will mark the 85th anniversary for the Sunday Independent, a weekly independent newspaper in my congressional district in northeastern Pennsylvania.

As I rise to pay tribute to this publication, I am reminded of the eloquent and timeless words of Thomas Jefferson, who once remarked, "where the press is free, and every man able to read, all is safe."

Historians frequently refer to Jefferson as one of the champions of freedom of the press, for he appreciated the instrumental role the press plays in "enlightening the mind of man, and improving him as a rational, moral and social being."

Mr. Speaker, for nearly 85 years the Sunday Independent has striven to provide area residents with important and relevant information on a wide variety of local, State, National, and international issues.

The history of northeastern Pennsylvania and the Wyoming Valley over the course of this century has been reported and analyzed by the publishers, editors, and journalists of the Sunday Independent. Led by the Heffernan family, this weekly paper was founded in 1906 and has served our area ever since.

As we pause to celebrate the newspaper's anniversary, I think it is also fitting to recall some of the important events over this past century that the Sunday Independent played a critical role in reporting.

In fact, I am sure if we trace through the last 85 years by simply reading the headlines of the Sunday Independent, we may well gain a fine appreciation for the rich history of our region.

From the rise of the anthracite coal industry to today's new economic revitalization fueled by a variety of different industries, the people of this region have constantly demonstrated impressive and honorable fortitude, resilience, and flexibility to adjust to changing times.

When World War I began, the sons of Wyoming Valley gallantly answered our Nation's call to service. During the tumultuous and often painful years of the depression, local residents remained determined to succeed in the face of tremendous adversity.

The blossoming of education institutions followed, with the emergence of many fine high schools a Penn State branch and other institutions of higher learning including Wilkes College, Kings College, and College Misericordia.

As we look to the future with the hope of continued economic opportunity and the preservation of our fine quality of life, I am certain that just as local residents have turned to the Sunday Independent for information and news in the past, they will do so in the years ahead as well.

As we prepare to enter the last decade before the next century, I wish to extend my best wishes to the Sunday Independent and the many who have contributed to its success and growth. As the Sunday Independent family looks with great pride at the 85-year history of the paper, they must also be looking to the future with the expectation that they will continue to be a major institution in northeastern Pennsylvania.

TRIBUTE TO ST. PAUL'S R.C. CHURCH OF CLIFTON, N.J. ON ITS 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the deepest reverence and the greatest sense of pride that I rise today to salute an outstanding house of worship in my Eighth Congressional District of New Jersey which, for three quarters of a century, has been a spiritual focal point and a beacon of faith for countless numbers of worshipers in the greater northern New Jersey area.

I am speaking of St. Paul's R.C. Church of Clifton, NJ, which will be celebrating its 75th anniversary on October 13. I know the observance of this historic occasion will be an especially proud event for Rev. Msgr. Ronald Amandolare, the pastor of St. Paul's and its guiding force for these past 11 years.

Mr. Speaker, the history of St. Paul's Church is a rich one, beginning 78 years ago with the first meeting of those interested in forming a Catholic Church community in Aquackanonk—which later became Clifton—followed a year later by the formation of the Aquackanonk Catholic Association. The parish was incorporated in 1914 as St. Paul's Catholic Church of Aquackanonk, with its first pastor, Father Paul Guterl, celebrating the church's first mass in the frame church on Second Street.

There have been many significant dates in the history of this important church. For the benefit of you and our colleagues, I would like to list a brief chronology denoting some of St. Paul's many milestones:

1915—A Rectory was built on Union Avenue.

1917—A farmhouse was purchased next door to the church for use as a Convenant and School, and is the present Parish House.

1922—The present parochial school was constructed at the corner of Main and Washington Avenues.

1937—The main church is demolished and ground is broken for the present church.

1946—Father Guterl dies and is buried near the Grotto next to the church.

1947—Msgr. Joseph Hewetson is appointed pastor. Groups including C.Y.O., Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Brownies, Bible Study Groups, and the St. Vincent de Paul Society are established.

1964—The Parish celebrates its 50th anniversary.

1968—Msgr. Hewetson retires and Msgr. Frank J. Rodimer is assigned as the new Pastor. The first lectors are appointed and the Parish Advisory Board is formed with Al Esser as the Chairman. David Galusha is named as the first Director of Religious Education.

1970—Catherine Barrett, the first woman trustee, is appointed.

1972—the Parish becomes affiliated with the local Council of Churches. Msgr. Rodimer is given the Fellowship Award from the Jewish Community and the first issue of the Parish newspaper, "Witness", edited by Stephen Cellini, is published.

1974—The Last Supper mural, done by artist Richard Botto, is installed in the convent chapel. A Parish trip is made to Rome and 14 Eucharistic Ministers are commissioned.

1978—Msgr. Rodimer is elevated to Bishop of the Paterson Diocese. Fr. Ronald Amandolare is appointed pastor.

1978—Father Christopher DiLella is ordained, the first ordination held in the Parish.

1982—Fr. Amandolare is elevated to Monsignor.

1984—The 70th anniversary of the Parish is celebrated.

1985—Msgr. Vincent Molloy is assigned to St. Paul's as Associate Pastor and the newly established Junior Choir is invited to perform at St. Bartholomew's Church and St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City.

1986—the 25th anniversary of the ordination of Father Amandolare is celebated.

1987—Father Amandolare completes 10 years as Pastor of St. Paul's and Joseph Puskas, a parishioner, is ordained a permanent Deacon and assigned to St. Paul's Parish.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the many dates that hold a great significance in the long and historic past of St. Paul's Church, and give a brief glimpse of the road it has traveled to its status as the spiritual and civic hub of its great community.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to present a portion of the history of this distinguished parish that has remained dedicated to helping others and guiding them spiritually. As St. Paul's R.C. Church of Clifton, NJ, celebrates its 75th anniversary, I know that you and all of our colleagues here in Congress will want to join me in extending our warmest greetings and felicitations for both the service and guidance it has provided for its community, State, and Nation.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH P. DOYLE

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today a very special constituent of mine, Joseph P. Doyle, will be honored during a meeting of the San Bernardino City Council. After 30 years in the electrical industry in San Bernardino County, Joe has announced his retirement.

Joe has a reputation as a get the job done kind of leader. He has demonstrated exceptional leadership in labor's involvement in employment and training programs and activities. The real test of his accomplishments is the impact his service and career have made on the lives of disadvantaged youth and adults who have received the benefits of his expertise. Mr. Doyle has exemplified labor's role in its employment and training mission in the local community, the State, and the Nation.

Joe has based his career on three major life goals: First, to be a good father and husband; second, to be proficient in his vocation; and third, to serve his community and fellow man. His career, from his electrical apprenticeship in 1956 through 1958, to his position as International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 477 business agent, to his position as Local 477's business manager, has given Joe the opportunity to fulfill his vocational and community service goals.

In our community, Joe participated in the Private Industry Council, the JTPA Program, the Inland Manpower Association, and the Inland Empire Worker Training Program, bringing his special skills and his commitment to our Nation's youth to the business of putting our citizens to work.

Joe has always given freely and unselfishly of his time and talents because of his deep devotion and concern for his fellow human beings. I know I have appreciated Joe's counsel during the many years I have represented the 36th Congressional District. I know Joe's retirement is well-deserved. He should know, however, that I intend to call on him during his retirement. His special talents have enriched our community, and I know he will continue to share his time and talents with us.

SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY TRIBUTE TO LOUIS "RON" FINKLE

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. RANGEL, Mr. Speaker, today I want to pay tribute to a fellow New Yorker on the occasion of his 70th birthday that was celebrated on September 29. Mr. Louis R. "Ron"

Finkle has been extremely active in the anti-drug abuse field as a volunteer for the past 25 years. Although this topic has now become a hot issue, Ron is no Johnny come lately. He became involved with the drug program at a time when very few people realized the dangers of drug abuse and the potential devastating effects it might have on society.

His involvement with anti-drug abuse programs began in Queens, NY where he started an educational program through the Knights of Pythias. His efforts resulted in the first "drugmobile" project which consisted of a van equipped with an educational display. The van, manned by volunteers, would park in busy neighborhood areas so that weekend shoppers could be informed about the dangers of heroin and narcotic abuse. He was also connected with a New York City-wide educational effort and helped set up many school-oriented sessions which had ex-addicts speak to students about the drug problem.

Mr. Finkle was also associated with the Samaritan Halfway Society when it was a fledgling organization which assisted drug addicts with treatment and education. Samaritan has grown to be a very important resource in the treatment of addiction and has an AIDS residential facility. Ron was a board member for many years and also served as chairman of the Samaritan Foundation.

I want to wish Ron a happy birthday and say thank you for being there before it became the in thing to do. We need more foot soldiers like Ron in our war against drugs.

FLORIO PAYS TRIBUTE TO NEW JERSEY FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN—70TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues an event marking the 70th anniversary of the New Jersey Federation of Business and Professional Women [BPW], a highly respected organization voicing the concerns of working women in the Garden State. The anniversary will be recognized at a luncheon on October 21, 1989, in Princeton.

Organized in May of 1919 in the New Jersey towns of Trenton, New Brunswick, Plainfield, and Perth Amboy, the federation came together as a result of the need for a coordinated women's effort during the First World War. After the war, the organization was maintainted so as to focus upon issues impacting women and in July of this same year the national federation was established. During the 1920's, women's suffrage was of great importance and during the Second World War the federation took an active role and supported the establishment of the women's branches of the service.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, this group has initiated and maintained focus upon the passage of the equal rights amendment—the first women's organization to do so—as well as issues related to child labor laws. New Jersey BPW continues to appropriately voice their concerns at all levels of government with emphasis upon electing men and women to public office who share a commitment to equality. New Jersey BPW has a proven record of accomplishment as it fosters self-development opportunities, leadership growth and support through a network that expands throughout New Jersey and the Nation.

It is clear that the federation will continue to grow and prosper through its dedication to its principles and commitment to excellence in all of its endeavors. I respectfully ask that my colleagues join with me in saluting the New Jersey BPW upon the occasion of their 70th anniversary for their fine efforts on behalf all New Jerseyans.

A TRIBUTE TO DARLENE McMULLEN FOR 20 YEARS SERVICE ON THE ENERGY AND COMMERCE MINORITY STAFF

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, as ranking member of the Energy and Commerce Committee, I rely heavily on the knowledge, expertise, and counsel of the minority staff. I can say without exaggeration that these men and women are among the most capable and hard-working individuals on Capitol Hill.

However, I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize one particular staffer, Darlene McMullen, for her many years of dedication and outstanding contributions as a public servant. In July, Darlene celebrated her 20th anniversary as a member of the minority staff. This is indeed a memorable occasion for Darlene, one which deserves to be commemorated in a special way.

Her official title is legislative assistant and she works closely with the minority counsel to prepare for hearings. But that doesn't even begin to describe all that Darlene does. She is an encyclopedia of knowledge on committee legislation as well as legislative procedure. If you need to know the status of a bill, when a hearing will be held, or the inside scoop, she either knows the answer or knows where to find it.

Over the years, she has been the rudder of the ship, keeping the whole operation running smoothly between changes in committee organization, leadership, both Democratic and Republican, and staff. She is the institutional memory from one Congress to the next, the one thread of constancy and permanancy that endures in this oftentimes chaotic microcosm of American democracy that is the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. Speaker, competent public servants like Darlene McMullen are the backbone of American government. They take great pride in serving their country and in the effective, efficient performance of their duties. Their significant contributions are worthy of our highest praise and most sincere gratitude.

On behalf of my colleagues on the committee as well as the entire minority staff, I would like to express my deepest appreciation to Darlene for her many years of loyal and dedicated work. She is an irreplaceable member of the staff, and we all hope she'll continue in that role for many, many years to come.

SAY "NO" TO ARAFAT

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, in the near future PLO chairman Yassir Arafat may formally apply for a United States visa to address the United Nations in New York. I am opposed to the United States taking any actions, at this time, in favor of Arafat and the PLO.

Last December, Arafat accepted United Nation Resolutions 242 and 338, formally renouncing all forms of terrorism, and accepting Israel's right to exist. Since then, however, the PLO has taken a number of steps contrary to Arafat's avowed position regarding these matters.

More recently, the Fatah Congress has adopted a series of resolutions rejecting Israel's right to exist, renouncing Israel's peace initiative, and demanding a Palestinian state on Palestinian soil. Pronouncements such as these make evident the PLO's true intentions, and fly in the face of the Rule of Law among nations, as ratified and expressed by the United Nations. Moreover, increased incidents of cross border terrorism, internal violence against Israeli citizens, and intimidation in killing of fellow Palestinians show the PLO deeds fail to match Arafat's words of last December.

Mr. Speaker, granting a visa for Yasir Arafat to visit the United States, at this time, would reward the PLO for unacceptable behavior and would significantly advance the political interests of the PLO. At the same time, such an action would seriously compromise the ongoing search for a lasting peace in the Middle East.

SUPPORT HAWKINS/DOWNEY CHILD CARE PACKAGE

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the Hawkins/Downey child care package when it is considered by the House on Wednesday. The provisions of the reconciliation package address the most important elements of the child care debate: The need to expand the accessibility and affordability of quality child care.

I am pleased to submit for the RECORD a letter from Maryland Gov. William Donald Schaefer in support of the House budget reconciliation child care provisions. Opponents of the package have asserted that the package will result in too many requirements for States and remove current flexibility with regard to child care standards. Governor Schaefer's letter is a clear demonstration of support for the reconciliation provisions, and I hope his views will be considered as Members make their decisions on this important issue.

STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, DC, October 2, 1989.

Hon. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing in support of the child care provisions contained in the pending House Budget Reconciliation bill, H.R. 3299. While I know some of the details of the legislation still need to be worked out, I strongly support the provisions in the bill designed to guarantee quality in child care.

As you know, the lack of safe and affordable child care is a national crisis. that is why I testified in January before the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Children and Families in support of the Act for Better Child Care, the ABC bill. The bill is an ideal complement to my child care initiatives in Maryland because it gives states the resources we need to expand child care services, while at the same time, ensuring that the child care provided is of the highest quality.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for your strong leadership on this important issue. I urge you to keep working hard to make sure that any federal child care legislation contains quality assurance provisions.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM DONALD SCHAEFER,
Governor.

HONORING THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BUCKS COUNTY BRANCH OF AMERICAN RED CROSS

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a minute to bring your attention to one of the most outstanding social service organizations in Bucks County, the Southeastern Pennsylvania Chapter of the American Red Cross. A reception on September 29, 1989, will celebrate the 75th anniversary of the Red Cross in central and upper Bucks County.

The Bucks County Branch of the American Red Cross was founded in September of 1914. Mrs. William R. Mercer, wife of the Doylestown sculptor who built Aldie Mansion, called on the women of the community to set up an organization to help in the war effort. These women felt compelled to roll up their sleeves and volunteer in this period of great duress. In these early days, they worked as seamstresses repairing old uniforms and assembling new ones, while others rolled bandages or cultivated vegetable gardens. This group of concerned citizens also worked to raise funds to aid in the war effort.

After the war, the organization continued making items for the Doylestown Hospital which was jointly founded by Red Cross and the Village Improvement Association. Although Red Cross activities changed focus from the war effort to health services, service to the military was maintained.

From these beginnings, the Bucks County Branch of Red Cross has developed into the dynamic service organization we all recognize and appreciate. It currently runs various health and safety programs, a blood program, and military, disaster, and community services.

Mr. Speaker, service organizations like the Red Cross are a necessary and integral part of our society. It is my pleasure to call on my colleagues in the House of Representatives to congratulate the Bucks County Branch of the American Red Cross on its 75th anniversary and wish the organization continued success in the future.

MINORITY ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT WEEK—OCTOBER 1 THROUGH 7, 1989

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of "Minority Enterprise Development Week" [MED] which began on October 1 and continues through October 7, 1989. It is important for all Americans to realize that the future economic health of our Nation largely depends upon the hard-won business success of minorities. Minority businesses make tremendous economic and social contributions to this Nation and it is befitting that we recognize this as well as examine actions necessary for their development during MED Week.

Many entities are working for the benefit and development of more viable minority business enterprises. Development of these businesses is inevitable as Federal and State governments, in cooperation with the private sector, realize more and more the need to do more than just offer verbal encouragement. In my district in Baltimore, MD, there are excellent examples of practical and realistic assistance to minority businesses from a partnership of government and private business. The Baltimore Economic Development Corporation, known as BEDCO, has displayed the wisdom and foresight to house a minority business advocate within its operation. Ms. Caroline Britton is the advocate who administers a diverse program that assists minority businesses in the application process to find the financial assistance in the form of a capital investment necessary to not only survive, but to prosper. A recently developed program of the minority business advocate is the coordination of minority vendors to the booming convention business in Baltimore. Marketing the minority vendor's services to the various conventions that come to Baltimore is a very practical way to assist minority businesses.

Another example of government and business partnership is the Small Business Development Center in Baltimore and three other Maryland locations. Partially funded by the State of Maryland's Economic and Employment Development Agency and the Federal Government's Small Business Administration, the center employs three consultants with business experience who assist potential entrepreneurs. Getting the appropriate business plan together and preparing the proper loan package for banks is the kind of shirt sleeves know-how that gets minority business on the right track right from the beginning.

Furthermore, I feel proud that the minority business community has not lost the services of the Minority Business Development Agency—an agency that I am still working to codify and that the current administration has pledged to reinvigorate under the new leadership of Director Kenneth Bolton. The Minority Business Development Center in Baltimore, as well as the centers across the Nation, are performing valuable work on behalf of strengthening minority businesses and is the only national agency dedicated to assisting, preserving and strengthening minority business enterprise. I urge my colleagues, as we undertake this official recognition of Minority Enterprise Development, Week, to join in support of this legislation.

In closing, I welcome the hundreds of minority entrepreneurs and representatives from Federal, State, and local governments, as well as private corporations from across the Nation that will participate in activities held here in Washington, DC, during MED Week.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO MR. DAVID BARNES, NATIONAL BLIND WORKER OF THE YEAR

HON. LINDY (MRS. HALE) BOGGS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to honor Mr. David Barnes, the recipient of the 1989 Peter J. Salmon National Blind Worker of the Year Award. Mr. Barnes was selected by National Industries for the Blind from among 56 nominees across the Nation. Mr. Barnes is most deserving of this award.

Each year National Industries for the Blind chooses one outstanding individual who is blind from among the 6,300 blind and multihandicapped blind people who work in their affiliated agencies for the blind participating in the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act Program. Since 1938, the Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act has provided employment opportunities for thousands of this Nation's blind, multihandicapped blind, and other severely handicapped citizens.

Today, I commend Mr. Barnes for his efforts to succeed in employment and to meet life's challenges. Blind since birth and without functional hands or feet, Mr. Barnes has worked at the Lighthouse for the Blind, New Orleans, LA, for the past 13 years. Mr. Barnes has performed a variety of manufacturing jobs at the Lighthouse. Currently, he is a swifttack operator attaching plastic fasteners to hold tags on various products. Also, he operates a scrubber machine and folds and labels boxes.

In addition, Mr. Barnes works part time at McDonald's to help support his mother and brother who cannot work. Recently, Mr. Barnes started his own advertising button manufacturing business.

Mr. Barnes' attitude and motivation are an inspiration to those who meet him. A volunteer at F. Edward Hebert Hospital where he works with multiply disabled patients, Mr. Barnes also plays drums with a Cajun band, bowls, rides a specially equipped bicycle, and rides horses.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Barnes deserves our congratulations for his accomplishments.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MARION DEVLIN ON HER 80TH BIRTHDAY

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, my fellow colleagues, today I want to tell you about Marion Devlin, a native Californian, journalist, community activist, and longtime resident of my district, who will celebrate her 80th birthday on October 29.

Like so many in her native State, Marion Devlin has been a pioneer. Born in the family home in Vallejo, Marion majored in journalism at the University of California at Berkeley, earning her degree in 1931. With her experience at the Daily Californian, she quickly earned a job as society editor at the Vallejo Evening Chronicle.

In her many years at the Chronicle, and later the Vallejo Times Herald, Marion Devlin earned a reputation for scooping the competition. She has interviewed such notables as Eleanor Roosevelt, Mamie Eisenhower, and Lady Bird Johnson; three reigning queens; and stars of the silver screen including Clark Gable and Shirley Temple. The California Newspaper Publishers Association voted her best in the State 10 times.

Marion Devlin has been as active in her community as anyone who has graced her column. One of the favorite causes has been quality health care. She is a founding member of the Lilac Branch of the Children's Hospital of Northern California. In recognition of her many years of dedicated service, the Sutter-Solano Hospital Guild has induced her as an honorary member.

As a college graduate and a journalist, Marion Devlin has been involved in women's collegiate and professional organizations. Her hometown, Vallejo, has a proud history of association with the Navy. In addition to her role covering the military as a journalist, she has worked to preserve the Vallejo-Navy tradition at the Vallejo Naval and Historical Museum.

I hope you will join me in congratulating Marion Devlin on the occasion of her 80th birthday. Marion Devlin has been an inspiration to all who have known her and her years of distinguished serve to the community will long be remembered.

HONORING DONALD J. BUCHER ON RETIREMENT

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to note the great contributions of Donald J. Bucher, senior veterans service officer at the Suffolk County Veterans Service Agency. Don will retire on November 3, 1989, after 23 years of dedicated service to the veterans of Suffolk County.

Don Bucher has a long and distinguished record of service to his country. He served in the U.S. Navy during World War II from 1944 to 1946 as well as during the Korean conflict in 1951.

A life member of the American Legion. Don served as second division adjutant in 1967–68 and as a commander of the Rusy Bohm post 411 of Islip, NY, from 1968 to 1969. Since 1969, he has been a post service officer.

In his capacity as a senior veterans service officer, Don has worked with thousands of veterans and helped them to resolve a wide range of problems. It is common for a veteran to call Don at home to ask for his help in completing a VA form or to ask for his advice in resolving a family problem. Regardless of the time of day or circumstances. Don has never turned his back on a plea for help from a fellow veteran.

Mr. Speaker, Suffolk County has one of the highest concentrations of veterans found anywhere in the Nation. Don Bucher has provided valued assistance to these men and women. The veterans community, and all of Suffolk County, owe him thanks for his tireless, dedicated service.

THE DEATH OF FERDINAND MARCOS

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, the death of former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos completes a sad chapter in the history of the Philippines. On the occasion of his passing, it is worthwhile to reflect on United States relations with his regime and to consider the lessons of the Marcos era for our future conduct.

Ferdinand Marcos had a promising start as President of the Philippines, and there were some encouraging actions he took to build an alliance with the United States. Nevertheless, he became a dictator who soon forgot the needs of the Filipino people. He, his family, and his cronies amassed tremendous wealth while over 70 percent of the Filipino people lived in the worst kind of Third World poverty. In order to stay in power, he ruled by decree, suspended genuine democratic processes, and engaged in gross violations of basic human rights.

When I first came to Congress in 1979, human rights and church groups brought to my attention the serious human rights problems in the Philippines. I was deeply troubled by the way the United States seemed to be embracing Marcos and propping him up to power. Both Democratic and Republican administrations put our strategic relationship with the Philippines first. That is, our immediate security interests were our overriding priority in our dealings with Marcos.

Yet our Government knew all along about the way our aid was being wasted and stolen by Marcos, about the human rights abuses, and about the failure of the Marcos regime to meet the basic human needs of the Filipino people. But this was overlooked because Marcos allowed us to keep our bases at Clark and Subic Bay.

I offered amendments in 1979, 1980, and 1984, to make some small cuts in our military aid to Marcos in order to send him a message that we wanted him to change. The other point of the cuts was to let the Filipino people know that we were on their side against this dictator. The longer we supported Marcos, the angrier the Filipino people became, and the stronger the Communist insurgency grew.

The assassination of Senator Benigno Aquino seemed to be a turning point in terms of the downfall of Marcos. Through this event, the whole world saw the evil nature of that regime. They thought they could get away even with a blatant murder like this. But they were wrong. Aquino became a martyr, and his wife Corazon Aquino—with the support of "People Power"—eventually became President.

Despite these positive developments, the situation remains uneasy. A country cannot be turned around overnight. For too many years, the basic needs of the Filipino people were ignored. Poverty and injustice grew and the many problems were allowed to fester. President Aquino has made some remarkable progress, especially in view of the conditions she inherited. But the needs of the people are overwhelming, and it is hard for Filipinos to remain patient when their hopes are high.

The Multilateral Aid Initiative—sometimes dubbed the "Mini-Marshall Plan"—is moving ahead gradually to provide development aid to the Philippines. Other countries, like Japan, will be joining with the United States to provide this aid. As my colleagues know, the foreign aid appropriations bill contains $160 million in fiscal year 1990 for the U.S. contribution to this plan, as part of a total U.S. commitment of $1 billion over a 5-year period.

Money is very much needed in the Philippines, but there is a need for structural reforms as well. That is, land reform must be instituted, and the very rich landowners and oligarchies must be willing to cooperate in changes that will lead to the redistribution of resources and the empowerment of the very poorest people.

Despite the efforts of the Aquino government, human rights organizations continue to express concern about human rights violations. While the New People's Army is responsible for incidents of killing and terror, right-wing vigilante groups also engage in acts of terror, murder, and harassment against those working to create a more just society in the Philippines.

In the meantime, there is bilateral concern about the bases agreement, which runs through 1991. It is not clear how this ultimately will be resolved in the Philippines. Many Filipino politicians are opposed to the bases for political and nationalistic reasons. The Aquino government has talked about having a popular referendum to decide the bases question. In view of the uncertainty, our country has to be prepared for the possibility that the bases agreement will not be renewed, and must be ready to address the impact of such an occurrence on bilateral relations with the Philippines.

It is my hope that we will apply the lessons we have learned from our dealings with Marcos. Never again should we rely upon our relations with a corrupt dictator to advance our interests in another country. We must never forget the importance of establishing a firm and lasting mutual respect with the people of a country—as opposed to a temporary arrangement with an individual leader.

The Marcos era was not a good one either for the Filipino people or for the United States. We continue today to pay the price for our flawed policy concerning Marcos. At the last minute, shortly before the fall of Marcos, our Government finally did come down more clearly on the side of democracy in the Philippines. However, we need to be world leaders for democracy, not last-minute followers of events.

The lesson of the Marcos era is for us to be true to our values. If we do what is right from the start, then in the end we will benefit. We only end up hurting ourselves when we fail to practice consistently what we profess as a nation.

A TRIBUTE TO FRED DAVID

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual in recognition of his service to my community. October 1, 1989, marks the beginning of Fred David's 58 years in business and it is with great honor that I share with my colleagues the distinguished career of this stellar individual.

Not long after moving to Sacramento, Fred David began what has become a long and successful career in business. Fred's many experiences as a salesman include selling the Sacramento Star newspaper on street corners and selling fish and vegetables at a public market. These experiences enabled Fred to open his first candystore in San Francisco in 1930. It was through this venture that Fred was able to learn the basics of a successful business, including the ever important role of the customer and the effects of supply and demand economics.

Fred returned to Sacramento with his bride, Isabelle Shikany, in 1932 and established the David Candy Co. He merged his candystore with David's Cafe in 1933, ventured into ice cream making and for the past half a century has operated this thriving company in my community. Throughout his career, Fred David has been the helping hand, the shoulder to cry on and the sagacious mentor for many entrepreneurs. The David Candy Co. at 1015 R Street is an institution noted for its service, its quality and the enjoyment it brings to all that have had the opportunity to visit the company and meet its owner, the "Sweet Guy," Fred David.

Mr. Speaker, Fred David and the David Candy Co. have brought enjoyment to the entire Sacramento community. His dedication and service have not gone unnoticed and on behalf of the community, I congratulate him for a job well done. I know that my colleagues join me in extending best wishes to Fred for continued success in all his future endeavors.

THE WORK OF THE NORTH WIND UNDERSEA INSTITUTE

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the North Wind Undersea Institute located in my congressional district.

The North Wind Undersea Institute is an educational and environmental museum which is dedicated to preserving and protecting the environment and marine life. North Wind has participated in the dramatic rescues of beached marine mammals and has researched and developed new technologies to aid wildlife and the environment.

North Wind has received many honors during its existence and recently obtained a patent for its Benjamin Box live trap for sea lions. The Benjamin Box is a floating cage designed to safely capture sea lions and other mammals and transport them to more secure habitats. Past devices for capturing sea lions have tended to injure or kill these animals. The Benjamin Box is truly a significant breakthrough in the humane treatment of animals.

Additionally, North Wind recently received a $30,000 grant for a program to promote the welfare of wild mustangs. This grant will allow approximately 2,000 Bronx schoolchildren to learn about horses, their history and their present environmental dilemma. This money will permit North Wind to expand its already successful message of environmental conservation and awareness to even larger numbers of young people.

I have been proud to work with North Wind during its 10 year existence. The patent of the Benjamin Box to help sea lions and the obtaining of a grant for the preservation of wild mustangs shows this organization's continued commitment toward the assistance of all animals. I offer my sincere congratulations to North Wind for its achievements and look forward to working with them in their efforts to educate people about protecting the environment and the rights of animals.

HONORING MARGARET "PEG" SWEZEY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

HON. FLOYD H. FLAKE

OF NEW YORK

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday October 2, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Queens delegation rises today to honor a woman respected and beloved throughout our county of Queens by all who have had the pleasure to meet her. That woman is Margaret "Peg" Swezey, a successful businesswoman, a committed community leader, an avid patron of the arts, and above all a wonderful person without whom the Queens community would be much the poorer.

In appreciation of the many years of distinguished service Peg has given Queens, Citibank's Queens Retail Bank and members of the Queens community will hold a cocktail party in Peg's honor on October 5 at the East River Yacht Club.

It is extremely difficult for us to describe here just how much Peg has done for Queens. Her contributions to the economic and cultural improvement of Queens have been so numerous and varied that they cannot be summed up in a few sentences. Her accomplishments literally speak for themselves.

Born and raised in Queens, Peg has devoted herself to economic development, civic responsibility, and assisting others. She still lives in Queens with her husband, Harold, a retired electrical engineer with Western Electric. Their one son, Mark, is now a high school teacher in Kansas.

Peg has spent her whole career working in Queens for Citibank. In a career spanning three decades, she has diligently climbed the corporate ladder, starting as a junior clerk and working her way through the ranks to become vice-president and director of community and government relations. She will conclude her career this year when she retires from her position as vice president to join her son, Mark, in the Midwest.

At Citibank she has encouraged increased coopreation between the borough of Queens and many community organizations. She has herself served on the board of directors of a wide spectrum of Queens organizations, including the Queens Outreach Corp., the Flushing Council on the Arts, and the United Cerebral Palsy of Queens. Peg also holds the distinction of becoming the first woman to become president of the Queens Chamber of Commerce in its 71-year history.

Peg's services to Queens have extended beyond the local level, however. She has worked strenuously on the national and international levels to promote development in Queens. In 1980 and 1986, she served as a delegate to the White House Conference on Small Business and in 1982 she traveled to China with the Queens borough president to encourage Chinese investment in Queens.

In recognition for her services to Queens, December 12, 1979 and April 18, 1983 were proclaimed to be "Peg Swezey" days. In 1980, Governor Cuomo cited her for her service to Queens and in the same year she received national recognition for her work with the Small Business Administration when President Carter cited her as "Banker Advocate of the Year." In recent years she has been cited by the Queens borough president and honored by a resolution passed by the New York City Council recognizing her service to the City of New York. Peg has also earned a whole string of awards from local groups, including the Flushing Boys Club, the United Cerebral Palsy, the J.F.K. Rotary Club, the Alliance of Queens Artists, Jamaica Hospital, and numerous others.

Mr. Speaker, in a time when our communities are so clearly under attack, it is a pleasure to congratulate a person who has contributed as much as Peg to building a sense of community in Queens. We would like to take this opportunity to thank Peg, the mother hen of Queens politicians, for all she has done for Queens and to wish her the best of luck on her retirement. We will miss her.

THE 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF MR. AND MRS. CARL C. MARZANO

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues an exemplary couple from the Fifth Congressional District of Illinois, Carl C. and Carolyn Marzano, on the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary. They were married at Saint Nicholas of Tolentine Church, 62d and Lawndale in Chicago, on November 25, 1939, and are a role model of the family strength and solidity which has made America great.

Pioneers of southwest side bowling in Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Marzano will be joined by their family and friends from the southwest community in a celebration given by their two daughters, Carolyn Marzano of Chicago, IL and Gail Estok of Santa Barbara, CA, at the Rosewood West in Crestwood, IL, on October 8, 1989.

Before his retirement, Carl Marzano was a well-known figure on the Chicago bowling scene, operating three family-owned establishments totaling 162 lane beds. Established in 1922, the Marzano family business includes such reputable alleys as Marzano's Palace of Pleasure, Clearing Bowl and Miami Bowl, all southwest side bowling centers. Continuing the family tradition, Clearing Bowl and Miami Bowl are currently being operated by third and fourth generation family members.

Since retirement, taking cruises, fishing, and recreational vehicle travel around the United States and Canada have been interests of Carl and Florence Marzano. Long-time residents of Palos Park, Florence was an active member of the Palos Park Service League, and Carl was a founding member of the Palos Gun Club.

In addition to their daughters, they have three grandchildren: Tod Morris of Rochester, NY; Kristy Morris of Chicago, IL, and Lisa Reid of Santa Barbara, CA.

Their commitment to each other and their family is impressive and deserving of special recognition and honor. I am sure that my colleagues join me in congratulating Mr. Carl Marzano and his bride of 50 years, Florence, on their many years of love and commitment. May their life together continue to be an adventure and offer them many more pleasant memories.

CPSC'S ACTING CHAIRMAN AGAIN UNDER FIRE

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 2, 1989

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, in these times of deficits and budget cutting, Government employees all across the Nation are receiving tributes and awards for ideas and policies which contribute to Government savings. I hope that my colleagues on the Energy and Commerce Committee will consider whether the official travel outlined in this October 7, 1989, "Human Events" article contributes to the wise use of the limited Federal budget:

[From Human Events Oct. 7, 1989]

CPSC'S ACTING CHAIRMAN AGAIN UNDER FIRE

Credit for the most audacious junket in recent memory goes to Susan Birenbaum, acting general counsel of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. Birenbaum was in Moscow last week, lecturing Soviet lawyers and Communist party members on product safety laws.

Birenbaum's salary, airfare, hotel rooms and incidental expenses are being paid for by the commission, according to the authoritative Product Safety Letter. The trip was apparently authorized by the commission's acting chairman, Anne Graham.

Why Birenbaum would go to Moscow is difficult to understand. The Soviet Union exports practically no manufactured consumer items to the United States; more than 90 per cent of the goods it does send are outside the CPSC's jurisdiction, e.g., gold, fur and vodka.

While conservative critics see Birenbaum's junket as still another CPSC boondoggle, the Product Safety Letter reports that the CPSC staff is disgruntled, too. The Birenbaum trip will likely take a big bite out of the limited annual travel budget which agency lawyers use to enforce safety laws in federal courts throughout the country. Chairman Graham, meanwhile, is pressing for a 20 per cent hike in the commission budget, which would wipe out all the savings of the last eight years and take commission spending back up to where it was in the Carter Administration.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE] if he would kindly come forward and lead the membership in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. WISE led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2358. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Civil Achievement Award Program in Honor of the Office of Speaker of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 838. An act to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to release restrictions on the use of certain property conveyed to the Peninsula Airport Commission for airport purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J. Res. 199. Joint resolution providing for the reappointment of Samuel C. Johnson as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution;

S.J. Res. 202. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of Robert James Woolsey, Jr., of Maryland as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and

S. Con. Res. 74. Concurrent resolution authorizing the "Gift of Democracy" from the U.S. Congress to the new Senate and Sejm in Poland. This gift is comprised of equipment and training that is determined to be most useful in helping Poland establish an effective parliamentary system.

WELCOME TO PRESIDENT SALINAS OF MEXICO

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, why is President Salinas de Gortari of Mexico being so well received by the United States Congress and the Bush administration? Is it because it is his honeymoon visit to the United States as President of Mexico?

Mr. Speaker, the reason is that we have a Mexican President who is ready to deal with Mexico's problems and with the United States. Mr. Speaker, we are cooperating for the first time with Mexico in drug interdiction. We have cooperated on a historic debt agreement. We are cooperating on immigration.

In the past, the Reagan administration and the Mexican Presidency could not get together on many other issues because of our differences over Central America. We now have a relationship where the United States considers Mexico to be important. About time, Mr. Speaker.

President Salinas will be very welcome both in the U.S. Congress and in the United States with this new administration.

REFERRAL OF H.R. 2434 AND S. 1016 TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. UDALL. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 2434 and S. 1016, both bills renaming a reservoir in Kansas, be re-referred to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

SHOOTING AND TROOP MOVEMENTS IN PANAMA

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to this morning's events in Panama where an attempted coup or insurrection may be in progress. Shooting was heard this morning in General Noriega's headquarters at Fort Amador. Troops have been positioned at numerous public and private locations.

As yet we have no word on the motivation for such activities, what persons may be involved, or the likely final outcome.

However, I would like to note for the record our overwhelming sympathy for the Panamanian people and our hope that, somehow, today's events may bring them greater freedom.

On May 7, 1989, the Panamanian people voted for return to democracy. They have endured a great deal of hardship under General Noriega. They have borne with few complaints the serious economic deprivation caused by U.S. sanctions against the Noriega regime.

Regardless of what happens today, my colleagues, I would say to President Bush and Secretaries Cheney and Baker that my view of the mood of the majority of those of us in Congress is that we are deeply troubled by the timidity and ineffectiveness of the Organization of American States in assisting President-elect Endara to take his office, and that we want the United States to avoid standing like an impotent giant while the Panamanian people restore to authority those they elected on May 7, 1989, and to overthrow the tyranny of General Noriega and his thugs.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE HUGH QUINCY ALEXANDER

(Mr. HEFNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. HEFNER. Madam Speaker, it is with very great sadness that I inform the Members of this body of the recent death of our former colleague and one of my predecessors, Hugh Quincy Alexander of North Carolina.

Hugh Alexander was a man of tremendous talent who, throughout his life, dedicated his time and energies to efforts to make the world a better place for others. From the time he was a young man he was a leader in his church and in his local YMCA and Boy Scouts. And when he returned home from the Navy he took up the cause of our veterans—serving as an officer of both the American Legion and the VFW.

In 1952 the citizens of North Carolina sent him to Congress where he served ably and honorably for a decade. He then continued his service to this great institution as chief counsel to the Senate Rules Committee from 1963 to 1976.

When Hugh later returned home to Kannapolis, NC, he practiced law and continued his longstanding commitment to his community.

Mr. Speaker, like so many others, I had the highest respect and admiration for Hugh Alexander, and I wanted my colleagues to have an opportunity to see the articles about him that recently appeared in his hometown newspaper, the Daily Independent.

Hugh Alexander was a fine American and a cherished friend, and I know I speak for all of us in extending our deepest sympathies to his wife Myrtle and their four children.

The articles follow:

[From the Kannapolis (NC) Daily Independent, Sept. 18, 1989]

FORMER CONGRESSMAN HUGH Q. ALEXANDER DIES AT 78

Hugh Quincy Alexander, attorney, Kannapolis civic leader, and former member of the U.S. Hosue of Representatives, died early Sunday, Sept. 17, 1989 at Cabarrus Memorial Hospital.

He was 78 and resided at 804 Hillcrest St.

Services are planned for 11 a.m. Tuesday at First Presbyterian Church, where he was a member. The Rev. Eldon Wadsworth and Dr. Charles R. Raynal III will officiate, and interment will follow at Carolina Memorial Park.

The family will receive friends today from 7 to 9 p.m. at Whitley's Funeral Home and will be at the residence otherwise.

"In the death of Hugh Alexander, North Carolina has lost a dedicated public servant," Sen. Terry Sanford, DNC, said this morning. "I deeply valued his friendship. He used his life to make a difference for the good in many ways: as a soldier, leader of veterans, legislator, congressman, and outstanding community citizen. He will be deeply missed."

I was a real admirer of Hugh Alexander, a true gentleman and one of the finest men I've ever met," added 8th District Congressman W.G. "Bill" Hefner, "He had been a friend for a lot of years. I will miss him greatly, and the community will miss him."

Mr. Alexander was born in Moore County on Aug. 7, 1911, to the late Oscar Sample Alexander and Mrs. Mary Reynolds Alexander.

He moved to Kannapolis in 1930 and graduated shortly thereafter from Duke University. He worked in local textile mills until he resumed his education to graduate from the law school of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

He began his law practice in Kannapolis in 1937.

He served in the U.S. Navy for 44 months including 34 months overseas aboard the U.S.S. Raleigh, the flagship California, and the heavy cruiser Albany. He left the Navy in 1946 with the rank of lieutenant commander.

After service in the Navy, Mr. Alexander became active in veterans affairs and was elected commander of the Beaver-Pittman American Legion Post. He was later named judge advocate of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and chairman of Boys State.

In 1950, he was elected North Carolina commander of the American Legion.

He was elected to the N.C. House of Representatives in 1947 and served two terms before becoming county solicitor in 1950.

In 1952, Alexander was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives where he served until 1962. He served as chief counsel to the U.S. Senate Rules Committee from 1963 to 1976.

He returned to Kannapolis and resumed his practice of law with the firm of Alexander and Brown where he worked until his death.

"Mr. Alexander was an elder in the First Presbyterian Church and was instrumental in the organization of the Second Presbyterian Church.

He was a member and past master of Cannon Memorial Masonic Lodge and was a 33 degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner of the Oasis Temple of Charlotte.

He was a member of the Beaver-Pittman Post 115 of the American Legion and the 40&8 American Legion fraternity.

He was also a member of the Kannapolis Rotary Club, the Kannapolis Chamber of Commerce, and the Cabarrus Shrine Club.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Myrtle White Alexander; three sons, Hugh Q. Alexander Jr. of Chiefland, Fla., Stephen W. Alexander of Alexandria, Va., and William G. Alexander of Kannapolis; a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Alexander Harrison of Fredericksburg, Va; a brother, R. Lewis Alexander of Elkin; seven grandchildren.

Memorials may be made to the Hugh Quincy Alexander Memorial Scholarship Fund, c/o 310 Professional Building, Kannapolis, NC 28081.

[From the Kannapolis (NC) Daily Independent, Sept. 20, 1989]

HUGH ALEXANDER

Kannapolis lost a large bit of its senior leadership in the unexpected death of Hugh Q. Alexander on September 17.

He was the kind of leader that's nigh impossible to replace—patient, wise, committed, experienced, sharing. He worked hard for education, he dreamed and worked hard to turn dreams into reality. He appreciated the good life that his adopted hometown, Kannapolis, gave him, and he gave back to the community generously.

He grew up on a farm in Moore County, milking cows and plowing a mule. As a junior in Durham High School he earned top grades. He worked at many jobs to pay his way through Duke University, including summer work in carding and spinning departments at Cannon Mills here. He waited on tables and worked in the psychology department to cover his expenses at the University of North Carolina School of Law. After receiving his law degree in 1937 and passing the North Carolina Bar exam, he joined the staff of Cannon Memorial YMCA to save up enough money to begin his practice of law in the spring of 1938.

As a young lawyer, he became active in community affairs. He served the YMCA as a Hi-Y club advisor. He led in Boy Scouting—organizing a troop in Petheltown with 50 members and in 1939 he took 41 scouts to the New York World's Fair. He became active in the First Presbyterian Church and was instrumental in organizing Second Presbyterian Church.

Following 44 months of service as an officer in the U.S. Navy during World War II, he resumed his practice of law and his community service. He was elected commander of the Beaver-Pittman post of the American Legion in 1946 and four years later he was state commander of the Legion.

Answering the call to public service, he served in the North Carolina House of Representatives in the 1947 and 1949 sessions, and was elected to the U.S. House in 1952, where he served for 10 years. He then was chief counsel of the U.S. Senate's Rules Committee for 13 years.

After his retirement from his Washington work in 1976, he returned to his law firm in Kannapolis—and to his community service. Among his most recent interests was the Kannapolis Chamber of Commerce, in which he headed the legislative committee.

We remember Hugh Alexander's arrival in Kannapolis and his commitment to the legal profession and community service. Through the years we admired his scratching for education, his determination to be a successful lawyer, his eagerness to make a contribution to society.

We admired his parents, Oscar and Mary Alexander, who had come to Kannapolis in 1930, smack in the middle of the Great Depression, to share the job of secretary of the Merchants Association. This couple instilled in their six children a yearning for learning. Sons Hugh, Ernest and Lewis became lawyers. George and Edgar became dentists. Daughter Margaret became a teacher.

Hugh Quincy Alexander carried on his family's heritage.

He served his community, his state, his nation with pride and dignity.

We appreciate the imprint he left on our town. He will be missed.

REPEAL CATASTROPHIC HEALTH INSURANCE

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Madam Speaker, they say there are two reasons we ought to pass laws. One, because there is a public need; second, because there is a public demand.

If that second be the case, then today is the day, ladies and gentlemen to repeal catastrophic health insurance.

Here Members see it, 2,173 letters and postcards asking me to vote to repeal catastrophic health insurance.

Oh yes, I received one letter asking me to keep it. That is the ratio.

If we are going to repeal catastrophic health insurance today, and we are going to make the decision that it is not in the public's interest to tax some better off senior citizens to pay for a benefit for all, then let us certainly understand it is also wrong public policy to tax the poor elderly to provide a drug benefit for the wealthy senior citizens.

Vote for Archer-Donnelly. Vote against Stark-Gradison and respond to the demands of our senior citizen public.

DO NOT TOTALLY REPEAL CATASTROPHIC INSURANCE

(Mr. HAYES of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Madam Speaker, we have a chance today to heal some of the bruises and scars we cast upon the economically disadvantaged last week in the vote for capital gains and against workers' rights to protect their own pension funds and family security.

This week I appeal to Members to not destroy the long-term health care protection for our seniors with a repeal and a promise to reconstruct a better piece of legislation. Correct the inequities, but do not throw the baby out with the bath water.

Too many of us should not forget the roots from which we came.

POLAND

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Madam Speaker, some prominent Americans recently went to Poland to advise the new Government on ways of developing democratic political institutions. What they found was a government composed of people who had never held public office.

That is a problem not only for Poland, but for America as well.

No one in America has a real grasp of what Poland needs. And it appears that no one in Poland does either.

The temptation is to shovel money into Poland and call it a foreign policy. But that is pure pork barrel.

I hope that we in Congress can work together with the Bush administration on a policy that is responsive, not just to domestic political considerations in the United States, but to the real economic needs of the Polish people as well.

SEND IN THE MARINES FOR NORIEGA NOW

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Madam Speaker, there may be a coup underway in Panama, and if so now is the time for President Bush to send in the Marines and grab General Noriega. Right to the point, if we are going to do something about drug smuggling, it is time to stop talking and to do something.

Noriega has been indicted as the No. 1 internatinal drug smuggler. We have the biggest drug problem in the world. Now is the time to act with strength.

I think it is time that we should see pictures of General Noriega on the front page of the newspaper standing trial in America. That would be the greatest picture in the world. That will send the signals from this country.

Mr. President, go after him. Help those rebels. Now is the time to send in the Marines.

SUPPORT TOTAL REPEAL OF CATASTROPHIC INSURANCE

(Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Madam Speaker, the catastrophic bill has been just that for the elderly all across America since its passage last year. They are incensed. I receive countless letters from seniors each day demanding total repeal.

Mr. Paul Kemper of Troy, OH, who saved and worked for 46 years to have something when he retired, wrote "It's obvious you need the middle class to spend their lives saving, so you can have it to give away. Don't introduce another pay raise for Congress. We're mad!!! We don't care who wants to pay you honoraria. They have a choice!!! Catastrophic health care is . . . no choice!"

Mr. Oscar Koeppel from Middletown, OH, believes that because he had the foresight to save and invest for his elder years, he is now being fined."This act is a double tax on senior citizens," he wrote. "It is a propaganda law fooling those gullible people who want something for nothing. Repeal it."

Mr. Richard High of Troy, OH, wrote, "The catastrophic coverage I now have under my current family plan is far superior to the coverage in the new law." Madam Speaker, Catastrophic coverage under his current health plan costs only $3 more than his premium. That's $3, as opposed to the maximum $800 surtax.

We need to admit that this legislation has failed the seniors. A few band-aids here and there will simply not do the trick. Let's scrap this monstrosity. For the sake of our senior citizens, I urge my colleagues to support total repeal.

HIGH QUALITY HEALTH CARE FOR ALL AMERICANS MUST REMAIN A NATIONAL PRIORITY

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Madam Speaker, today is not a day for shortsightedness. Even with the likely outcome of the vote on the catastrophic health care program, we need to keep uppermost in our minds that providing affordable, high quality health care for all Americans has to remain one of America's national priorities.

Even today, in this era of modern medicine too many Americans, of all ages, suffer from inadequate health care. Skyrocketing costs are impoverishing millions of families, or, as may too often sadly be the case, skyrocketing costs are standing in the way of access to badly needed care.

So many problems remain in health care.

In rural America, hospitals are closing from lack of revenues and health care professionals are abandoning areas, leaving millions at risk. In our urban neighborhoods, the same lack of service and drain on financial resources jeopardizes the health of millions more. Physicians and hospitals are in many cases being whipsawed by high malpractice premiums. Some of the most basic ingredients of modern health care—affordable medicines, home health care services, adequate and early testing services, hospital coverage and long-term care—remain out of reach to millions of our citizens.

Madam Speaker, this problem is not going away after today's vote, and indeed, will not be solved by today's vote. The reasons for today's vote on catastrophic coverage are as many and as complicated as the problems which the program sought to solve. No matter what these complications are, let us not be shortsighted nor intimidated from pressing forward with solutions to ensuring that all Americans, young and old, have access to basic health care services. The American people want us to address the Nation's health problems in a comprehensive way; let us have the courage as public policymakers to do just that.

REPEAL CATASTROPHIC HEALTH INSURANCE

(Mr. PAXON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAXON. Madam Speaker, never before have so many New York senior citizens spoken so loudly, so clearly, or so convincingly.

Their message, repeal the ill-conceived catastrophic care tax now.

My district offices in western New York and the Finger Lakes region have been flooded with mail like this, some of the 3,807 cards and letters as of noon today, hundreds more calls, and many, many personal visits, all from seniors and not so seniors urging, requesting, and demanding repeal of this senior citizen tax and the Catastrophic Program, a catastrophy in and of itself.

Let us make no mistake, it is repeal seniors want.

Please support Donnelly-Archer, it is the only real repeal there is, the Stark amendment does not repeal this tax.

Let us not deceive seniors across America who want this tax to go and go today.

HEALTH CARE FOR ONE SHOULD BE HEALTH CARE FOR ALL

(Mr. WISE asked and was give permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Madam Speaker, the House will probably vote today to repeal the catastrophic illness bill. I understand the concerns many have with the program. But outright repeal will only mean thousands of low- and moderate-income senior citizens will not receive the care they desperately need.

But the debate here today illustrates some of the real underlying problems to the catastrophic illness bill. Namely, it provided expanded health coverage to one group. Senior citizens complained of a seniors only tax. Deep down I believe many were convinced it was a seniors only program.

Why were 70-year-olds able to get medical care that 7-year-olds could not? That is what this sad moment is about, a statement that the President and Congress cannot fool around the edges anymore with health care. Health care for one should be health care for all.

More and more Americans are demanding a comprehensive national health care policy. So while this Congress will greatly reduce a medical program for the elderly, let us vote today to begin crafting a true health package that treats alike the grandparents and their grandchildren.

KEEP EMBARGO ON CUBA

(Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, the Subcommittee on Western Hemispheric Affairs last week completed its five part series evaluating United States policy toward Cuba.

Unfortunately, the conclusion reached by some panelists is that the United States should lift the embargo and have full diplomatic relations with Cuba.

We should not lift the embargo now when the Cuban economy, sustained only by a $5 billion Soviet subsidy, is in shambles. The economic pressure must continue.

Fidel Castro is pulling troops out of Angola and Ethiopia and closing down Cuban diplomatic establishments abroad precisely due to Cuba's severe economic crunch.

Let us not ease up now.

When previous administrations sought to improve relations with Cuba, Castro responded by shipping guns to Central America. His response would be similar today.

Let us continue the embargo.

TAXES DO NOT BEGIN AT 65

(Mr. HOAGLAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOAGLAND. Madam Speaker, it is often said that life begins at 40. That may or may not be true, but I can tell you that taxes don't begin at 65—at least they won't after we vote to repeal the surtax.

As a freshman, everything this session is a lesson to me. But I think the entire Congress has experienced and learned something new with catastrophic health. First, never include the word "catastrophic" in the title of a law—it may be used against you in a letter from a constituent. Second, listen to your elders.

I have listened to some very informed and intelligent seniors in my district—and not always the wealthy—who tell me the surtax is wrong. We can question the timing, scope, and choice of the benefits. But what we now know is that we need a solution that doesn't include an unfair increase in the income tax.

We have very real deficiencies in health care for our seniors, and that must not be forgotten in the heat of this debate. We need more than 1-year health plans. To find an alternative, we need most of all to listen to those we all want to help.

REPEAL CATASTROPHIC

(Mr. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOUGLAS. Madam Speaker, I have received over 4,079 letters, at last count, from folks in New Hampshire who want me to vote today to repeal the Catastrophic Program. They feel ripped off, and for very good reason. What they thought they were going to get was long-term nursing home care. Instead what they got was a tax on a tax. They did not get what they wanted and what they need.

That is why we have to go back to the drawing board and start all over again. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that the program will be in deficit by the amount of $6 billion by 1993 and that is going to mean two things: You either raise the tax or you cut the benefits.

Our side of the aisle is very clear on this issue. The House Republicans on September 21 voted "to support outright repeal of catastrophic health care legislation."

We know where we stand.

We certainly hope the other side of the aisle will join us in supporting Donnelly-Archer.

DEMOCRATS SUPPORT QUALITY HEALTH CARE FOR ALL AMERICANS

(Mr. VISCLOSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Madam Speaker, regardless of the outcome of the debate later today I feel compelled to emphasize that the Democratic Party will continue to be the party of leadership in terms of providing accessible, quality health care for all Americans.

After all, it was Harry Truman at the 1948 Democratic National Convention who truly focused our Nation's attention on the need for a system of national health insurance. It was the Democratic Party that initiated the development of Medicare and Medicaid.

As we anticipate the future—stand assured that the Democrats will continue the drive for quality health care for all Americans, whether they are children in the spring of their lives, adults working without protection, or seniors concerned about the eclipse of their lives.

Regarding the latter, it is this Member's sense that as we renew the debate concerning senior health care we must be guided by the principle that we should not extend life unless we are prepared to improve it.

Miseries such as deafness, arthritis, dementia, and incontinence need as much attention from researchers as do wasting, chronic diseases.

QUALITY HEALTH CARE IS NOT A PARTISAN ISSUE

(Mr. CRAIG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRAIG. Madam Speaker, with all due respect to my colleague who just spoke, catastrophic health care is not a partisan issue. Quality health care is not a partisan issue. It is a national isue.

Let me quote from the Wall Street Journal of September 12:

> Why is catastrophic wrong? Catastrophic health is a classic example of Washington's politicians losing touch with the real needs of their constituents and allowing their staffs and lobbyists to design a legislative agenda.

It appears now that today we will debate and, hopefully, we will repeal catastrophic health. Let me suggest to my colleagues that if you do not like catastrophic-I, you will not like catastrophic-II because that is what Stark is all about. Apparently our colleague from California is after the same kind of attention that our colleague from Illinois received from seniors in August, direct attention from those, because he is like our colleague from Illinois proposing a major tax increase once again on our seniors.

Remember catastrophic, known and directed by Stark, is just exactly the kind of catastrophic we gave our seniors 1 year ago. Let us vote down both.

RETIREMENT OF ADM. WILLIAM J. CROWE, JR.

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Madam Speaker, I rise today to commend Adm. William J. Crowe, Jr., on the occasion of his retirement as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and his distinguished career in the U.S. Navy.

Admiral Crowe brought to his position the characteristics of candor, honesty, and intellectual capability which earned him respect worldwide. His nononsense approach to military crises and his ability to communicate the American ideals of freedom and individual liberty will not be forgotten.

His cautious and measured approach in dealing with the Soviets was evident as he made a historic trip to the Soviet Union, typifying the way Admiral Crowe engaged in hands-on activities, furthering our country's efforts in attempting to understand the changing Soviet society.

Throughout his 43 years of service, Admiral Crowe has served with honor and distinction. This country owes him a debt of gratitude for teaching us that great things can be accomplished through humble acts.

Admiral Crowe's actions throughout his distinguished career can best be described by the words of President George Washington, who when making his first annual address to the Congress said, "to be prepared for War is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

Thank you, Bill Crowe, for your service. America has benefited from your leadership.

CATASTROPHIC REPEAL

(Mr. SUNDQUIST asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Madam Speaker, I had the feeling that we made a mistake in passing the Catastrophic Coverage Act, when I noticed that most of my constituents had started referring to it simply as "catastrophic".

We have an opportunity today to face up to our mistake and set it right, by repealing catastrophic and restoring to our constituents the belief that Congress pays attention to their concerns.

I've paid attention. And what the seniors in my district tell me is that catastrophic costs them too much for benefits they do not want or need.

The only sensible option before us today is repeal; not delay, not modification, not a temporary rollback in the surtax; not spreading the costs of the program to the rest of America's taxpayers.

Repeal.

Let us face up to our mistake, put it behind us, and start fresh.

SAMOAN AND TONGAN ATHLETES IN AMERICAN FOOTBALL

(Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Madam Speaker, there are approximately 190,000 Americans of Samoan and Tongan ancestry—Polynesian descent—currently living in American Samoa and throughout the United States.

And today I want to pay a special tribute to our young Samoan and Tongan athletes who have taken up the sport of American football, and are doing quite well in the National Football League. I want to share their names with my colleagues.

Madam Speaker, I forgive my colleagues for their inability to pronounce my own name—but let me share with our fellow Americans the names of our young Samoan and Tongan professional football players in the NFL:

From Samoa:

Natu Tuatagaloa, defensive tackle, Cincinnati Bengals.

Falaniko Noga, linebacker, Detroit Lions.

Mosi Tatupu, running back, New England Patriots.

Dan Saleaumua, nose tackle, Kansas City Chiefs.

Taivale Tautalatasi, Jr., running back, Dallas Cowboys.

Mark Tuinei, offensive tackle, Dallas Cowboys.

Al Noga, defensive end, Minnesota Vikings.

Jesse Sapolu, center, San Fransciso 49'ers.

Glen Kozlowski, wide receiver, Chicago Bears.

From the Kingdom of Tonga:

Tim Manoa, running back, Cleveland Browns.

Steve Kaufusi, defensive tackle, Philadelphia Eagles.

Vai Sikahema, punt returner, Phoenix Cardinals.

Madam Speaker, I can think of no other country in the world that would allow these young men to compete and excel in a competitive sport like American football.

Madam Speaker, how do the members like that?

CONSTITUENTS DESIRE REPEAL OF CATASTROPHIC INSURANCE

(Mr. ARMEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARMEY. Madam Speaker, a constituent of mine, William Lowry Wallace, of Dallas, recently wrote to me concerning the Catastrophic Health Care Act. Although it is only one of hundreds of letters I've received favoring repeal, I'd like to share it with the House.

Mr. Wallace writes:

For some time I have listened to congressional justification of the catastrophic medicare bill. Some of these comments have been disdainful of the public's intelligence. One comment that "the public just doesn't understand the bill" was off-base. Congress doesn't seem to realize that we are well aware of the bill's shortcomings and in particular the discriminatory and outrageous taxing scheme devised to pay for this ill-conceived legislative fiasco.

No, I am not wealthy, neither am I in poverty. I am simply trying to "make do" with a modest retirement package and manage my investments so I will not be dependent on others. But the catastrophic medicare bill is a legislative maneuver to hit the middle class of this country's retirees.

Madam Speaker, this is America talking. We should listen to Mr. Wallace and others like him and vote today to repeal the catastrophic tax on our Nation's senior citizens.

HEALTH CARE CRISIS

(Mr. LAUGHLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Madam Speaker, I am here to join my voice with those who recognize that America's health care delivery system is in a state of crisis.

One of the towns I represent in rural Texas, became famous this year because the local high school pitcher appeared on the cover of Sports Illustrated for setting the record for 50 consecutive games won in high school baseball—a national record.

The name of the town is Brenham. It sits among green rolling hills. It is just down the road from where Sam Houston signed the Texas Declaration of Independence, and it is a wonderful place to raise a family. Brenham represents the very best of the rural American way of life.

Yet, in just the last 2 days, I have received over 100 cards and letters from citizens of Brenham, who fear that their hospital may be forced to close.

Since 1984, 73 Texas hospitals have closed, most of them small, rural hospitals like those in my district. The people who are writing me are hoping that their hospital does not become another statistic. They are asking that their leaders act now to preserve their way of life by allowing them to live near affordable, adequate health care services.

Madam Speaker, I do not know of a higher priority for this Congress than to answer these people with policies that put a stop to runaway medical costs. We are talking about preserving the American way of life.

We can permit no more cuts in Medicare. We must give rural hospitals a fair shake in the ratio of Medicare disbursements. And we must be prepared to take bold steps in restructuring the way medical services are delivered.

A TRIBUTE TO HUGH ALEXANDER

(Mr. VALENTINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VALENTINE. Madam Speaker, I rise in tribute to Hugh Quincy Alexander, a man of strong character, a former Member of the House, and a fellow North Carolinian, who died recently. I mourn his passing, but I am happy to have had the opportunity to know him.

Hugh Alexander began life with few of the material advantages that many of us take for granted. His parents moved to Kannapolis, NC, in the midst of the Depression. Raised in a close-knit family that believed hard work and a good education could accomplish anything, he worked odd jobs to put himself through college and then through law school.

Hugh Alexander was dedicated to community service. He participated in many community activities, such as the YMCA, the Boy Scouts, the Kannapolis Rotary Club, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Cabarrus Shrine Club. He was a faithful member of the First Presbyterian Church, and his efforts were instrumental in the organization of the Second Presbyterian Church.

He had a strong sense of patriotism. He answered his country's call to war in World War II when he served 44 months in the U.S. Navy. In 1950, he was named State commander of the American Legion. He served in the North Carolina House of Representatives from 1947 to 1949, and in 1952 he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives where he served for 10 years.

He was a good husband and father and a loyal friend. He will be sorely missed.

SUPPORT FOR DONNELLY/ARCHER

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Madam Speaker, I would like to add my voice to express my strong support for the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Since the passage of this truly catastrophic legislation, I have received numerous letters, almost 2,000 of them, from elderly constituents asking me to change or even repeal this law. Senior citizens complain that they are paying too much for benefits they do not need; it is the wrong catastrophe, and long-term care is what they want. And what is more, they are paying for it through increased taxes and premiums. I believe that today, we finally have the opportunity to give the people what they want. By voting for the Donnelly/Archer substitute, we have the opportunity to repeal this law.

I recognized last year this legislation was a mistake, and voted against it. It is time to repeal the law and craft a new program that matches the needs of the majority of the seniors. Passage of the Donnelly/Archer substitute would allow us this opportunity.

HAPPY 78TH BIRTHDAY AND ALOHA TO TAIWAN

(Mr. AKAKA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AKAKA. Madam Speaker, Taiwan, our friend and ally in the Pacific, will celebrate its 78th birthday next week, Tuesday, October 10, 1989, and I know that many of my colleagues join me in congratulating President Lee Teng-hui and his people, and wish them continuing good fortune and success in the years to come. I had the privilege of meeting President Lee 3 years ago and I know that Taiwan will continue to prosper under his able leadership.

Taiwan has made quantum leaps economically, politically, and diplomatically in the past 2 years. Economically, it has sustained a remarkable growth rate averaging 10 percent or better each year. Politically, it has abolished martial law and lifted many of the old sanctions. Diplomatically, it has established ties with new friends and upgraded existing relationships with many European countries.

Let me also take this opportunity to indicate that I am pleased to see my dear friend, Mr. C.J. Chen, assume the post of vice foreign minister in Taiwan. Vice Minister Chen will have a great deal to contribute, especially in Taiwan-United States relations in view of his many years of distinguished service as Taiwan's deputy chief of mission in the United States. I am sure many of my colleagues on the Hill join me in wishing C.J. the very best.

Happy 78th birthday and aloha to Taiwan.

VOTE FOR DONNELLY-ARCHER REPEAL

(Mr. FAWELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAWELL. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

I have here an exhibit, which happens to be a new IRS form 8809, in regard to the supplemental premium. I tried to review that, and I will tell Members that it is not an easy thing to read. For any of those who still believe that we ought not to repeal the Catastrophic Care Act, I would suggest that those Members think long and hard about the fact that your constituents will have to wrestle with something like this.

For instance, the IRS estimates that "This form will add 1 hour and 34 minutes to tax preparation record-keeping time." I would multiply that by about 3. It also estimates that 12,169,000 taxpayers will spend 19,105,000 hours keeping records and filing forms.

In addition, Madam Speaker, I would like to say today that we not only have to vote for repeal, but we also have to vote down the Stark amendment because we are going down the same primrose path we went down in July 1988. Vote no on the Stark amendment. Vote aye on the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH CARE FOR EVERYONE

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Madam Speaker, today it will be clear that we can no longer tolerate the way we provide health care in this country.

We do not have a system any longer. The system we have is simply not working. Costs are skyrocketing. Hospitals are overwhelmed. Millions of people are getting no care—no care at all. And everyone is complaining—patients, providers, businesses, and Americans of all ages.

We face a crisis in this country where we cannot provide for the most basic health needs of all our citizens. We cannot provide long-term care. We cannot provide prenatal care. We cannot provide basic care.

Madam Speaker, the health care Hugo is upon us, and we are out trying to buy umbrellas.

The catastrophic act is the ultimate example of the moral bankruptcy of our health care system. We cannot go on selling health care to the highest bidder and selling out those who cannot afford it. Health care cannot continue to be a lottery.

Enough of these tentative, timid, band-aids. You know and I know there is only one real solution—comprehensive health care for everyone. Paid for by everyone and provided for everyone.

CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Health Care Act and in opposition to the Stark amendment which would turn the Catastrophic Health Care Act into a drug benefit program to be paid for by seniors only.

Neither refinancing nor piecemealing the Catastrophic Health Care Act is what the seniors want and need. They clearly want repeal. They understand that the Catastrophic Health Care Act is doomed; it is headed for bankruptcy.

According to CBO estimates, the drug benefit portion of the Stark proposal would cost $4.4 billion in 1992 with only $3.6 billion in revenue from the flat monthly premiums. In simple terms that means the program will run a deficit.

Because this deficit trend will continue into 1993, it is inevitable that by 1994 either the monthly flat premiums will skyrocket, the supplemental premium will be reinstated, or the act will have to be repealed altogether.

The Stark proposal is not a solution or even a temporary fix. In fact the drug benefit was one of the last proposals added to the Catastrophic Health Care Act.

My colleagues, although repealing the current Catastrophic Health Care Act creates what seems to be an immediate budgetary obstacle, by 1993 repeal will have reduced the deficit. And, almost more importantly, repeal will clean the slate for us to get to work on developing a long-term health care program that is fair and that works.

The responsible vote and the one we owe to the elderly across this country is for the Donnelly repeal and a vote against the Stark prescription drug program. it is a clear choice—a vote for Stark is a vote against repeal.

THE STATE OF HEALTH CARE IN AMERICA TODAY

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Madam Speaker, today, I would like to talk about the story behind the story concerning catastrophic health care. Last year, due to President Reagan's lack of vision, we were severely limited in terms of what we could do to provide quality health care to the citizens of this country.

Reagan would only accept a health initiative that would cover one aspect of quality health coverage, catastrophic health care. Even then, he would only accept a proposal to make the elderly pay, and thus, millions of seniors were charged with an excessive tax to pay for this needed component of a comprehensive health care system.

And with George Bush, nothing has changed. This administration still has shown no willingness to propose a comprehensive health program because this administration will not take the responsibility to provide the resources necessary to fund such a program.

While on the one hand the President has required all senior citizens to pay a Medicare increase for benefits that only 8 percent will utilize; on the other hand he provides the richest Americans, Americans earning over $200,000 a year with a $25,000 tax break windfall. That is the real story of today's debate.

THE EDUCATIONAL PERFORMANCE AGREEMENT FOR SCHOOL RESTRUCTURING

(Mr. SMITH of Vermont asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Vermont. Madam Speaker, in July, I introduced legislation which created greater freedom for local school districts for vocational education. Today, I am expanding that idea in the Educational Performance Agreement for School Restructuring Act, to give new life to our schools and the communities which support them.

We can no longer ask local educational authorities to labor under the double burden of excessive paperwork and regulation if they are to lead our schools into a more successful future. Often, those requirements apply to other districts in other areas, but a Federal bureaucracy which assumes that all school districts are the same, or should be made the same, does not listen to their pleas. To repeat a point I made on this floor 2 months ago, in my own State of Vermont there are 277 mostly rural school districts. Every one is unique, and none has the same problems as its counterparts throughout the Nation.

Madam Speaker, the Educational Performance Agreement's time has come. Under this agreement, and in exchange for a State appropriating the necessary funds, the Departments of Education, Federal and State, would drop most of their unnecessary regulation for a number of school districts in that State. These districts could then combine all the money they receive from the State and the Department of Education, no matter from what program. In return for an agreement with clear goals for the improvement of service to their children, these school districts could design their own programs, because they know best what's needed. If they do not meet the goals, they are dropped from the program.

In conclusion, let me again enter into the record the pleas of our Nation's public schools: The solution to many of their problems lies in nothing more radical than freedom and flexibility. Freedom to innovate and create new approaches that others might adopt, and flexibility to tailor the education our schools provide to the districts they serve. Part of that ultimate solution is the Educational Performance Agreement for School Restructuring.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

THE BILLBOARD CONTROL ACT OF 1989

(Mr. LEWIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Madam Speaker, today, I stand before you as little David, taking on Goliath, the billboard industry.

I do not have three stones to use with my slingshot, I only have a simple piece of legislation to control the proliferation of billboards throughout our Nation. I am here today calling on my colleagues to join with me and my good friend from Florida, CLAY SHAW, in sponsoring legislation to control the visual pollution that stains our Federal highways and byways.

The control of billboards is an environmental issue. The control of billboards is a public health issue.

I urge my colleagues to help eradicate this growing eyesore on the American landscape.

Madam Speaker, I call on my colleagues to support H.R. 3389, the Billboard Control Act of 1989.

HOW DO YOU SPELL "RELIEF"?

(Mr. BILIRAKIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Here we go again, Madam Speaker, we in this ivory tower telling our seniors what is good for them. A vote for Stark-Waxman this afternoon will mean that we are telling our seniors that in spite of the fact that we take away from them some of the moderate benefits of the current law in part A and part B, for instance in expansion of long-term care, although it is very moderate, certainly, far from adequate, we are saying to them, "You need prescription drug coverage," and we are saying to them, "You must pay for this prescription drug coverage even though it may cover many people who are not in the senior category," in spite of the fact that we increase a deductible from $600 to $800, thus reducing the amount of seniors that would be in the category of being able to get any sort of benefit whatsoever from prescription drug coverage.

FREE TRADE AND THE COMMON MARKET

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Speaker, I rise to fire a friendly shot across the bow of the European Community.

I support the unification of Europe, as is going on in their target of Europe 1992, but today the Community went too far. They passed a piece of legislation that is terribly mislabeled. It is labeled "television without frontiers."

Madam Speaker, this is not leading toward freer trade. It is a violation of the letter and the agreement of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade, and I call upon our President, acting under appropriate power, to seek to negotiate the withdrawal of this piece of legislation by the Community; if not, to take proper retaliatory steps against the European Community. They should know that while we support their efforts to unify and to build the Common Market, we will not tolerate, we will not tolerate, measures aimed at preventing fair and free trade.

THE WAR ON DRUGS

(Mr. WALSH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALSH. Madam Speaker, I rise today to help carry out the goal of our colleague, the late Larkin Smith and his desire to speak out for 28 days on the critical drug issue.

Our President has taken a leadership role in proposing a plan to rid our Nation of drugs but now it is up to us, Members of Congress, to take this starting point from the Executive and bring it home to our constituents. Congress has to prove to the American people that it is not just fighting a war on words.

The approach must be multifaceted—families must set an example with a drug-free household, schools must be diligent in keeping the academic arena a positive environment that stimulates learning and preparation for a productive adulthood—free of drugs.

Neighborhoods and communities also need to pay careful attention to activity on the streets and on the playgrounds.

As a cosponsor of legislation to consolidate our efforts in Congress, I feel strongy that we establish one committee to focus on this problem. Our current committee chairmen already have such tremendous workloads, due to their vast jurisdictions, but we need legislation to streamline the process and coordinate our efforts.

I am confident that we can win this war on drugs if we remain diligent in our resolve. Now that the Senate has passed the President's drug and crime packages, including an additional $1.1 billion as part of their transportation appropriations bill, I look forward to voting on a conference report and passing this measure for the President's signature. We need to put our words into action now.

CHANGES TO MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT

(Mrs. ROUKEMA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Madam Speaker, I was one of the first in my party, if not the first, to support Dr. Otis Bowen, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, when he first advanced this proposal to cover catastrophic illness. His proposal grew to encompass a wide array of services and was adopted with overwhelming support from the general public, the senior citizens and their lobbying groups, and with good reason.

And so we adopted this catastrophic illness bill—well-intentioned and in many respects well-devised.

There are millions of working people who, no matter how hard they worked, how much they save for a rainy day, they cannot afford the medical costs when illness strikes in their old age.

But Dr. Jekyll has turned into Mr. Hyde.

In short, this program is a catastrophe.

And so it is with great reluctance and regret that I rise in support of the amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Let me state for the record that our Nation's elderly deserve better. They deserve thoughtful deliberations by both bodies of Congress to determine what expansion of Medicare coverage is most needed and the fairest way to pay for it. It seems that instead of thoughtful deliberations, we have gotten political maneuvering and much backing and filling. This is not Congress' finest moment.

I have come to the conclusion that repeal of this law is necessary because there is no reasonable alternative before us. One that can give the coverage and gain the support of our constituents.

There has been too much misinformation. Too much disinformation. We can not put Humpty-Dumpty back together again. It is time to start over.

REPEAL THE CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE PROGRAM

(Mr. LEWIS of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Madam Speaker, today we will vote on an issue of crucial importance to our retired constituents, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. What a disaster.

The retirees in my district, along with millions of others nationwide, have let us know that they have one overwhelming priority for the first session of the 101st Congress—repeal the catastrophic program.

The Stark proposal is clearly not the answer seniors are looking for. They do not want a half-measure. They wants us to wipe the slate clean and start over.

We need to evaluate all of their health care priorities, weigh the options, and draw up a plan that answers their concerns. Primary among their health care worries is long-term care, and we must move to address this problem.

But first we must correct our catastrophic mistake. I urge my colleagues to listen to what the retirees across this land are saying, and vote to repeal this misguided law.

THE IRONY OF THE CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE DEBATE

(Mr. MOODY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOODY. Madam Speaker, the irony of the catastrophic debate is that the catastrophic health care program that we apparently are about to repeal is the ultimate middle-class and even upper-income program. It is not really a health care program, because poor people are taken care of in our society through Medicaid or through so-called uncompensated hospital care.

But what is it, if it is not a health care program? Catastrophic is actually an asset protection program. It protects people from having their assets wiped out.

The poor people in my district do not benefit from catastrophic. The wealthy people in my district benefit from catastrophic. The more you have, the more this program is important to you. That is why the premium was scaled in part to income and wealth.

To ask people, as many speakers have suggested, to pay the flat premium and to suggest that a flat premium is the fair way to go would be like charging the same flat premium for fire insurance whether you are insuring a mansion or a shack. The premium should be scaled to income and it is an upper-income protection program. It is not really a health care program.

SUPPORT DONNELLY/ARCHER AMENDMENT TO REPEAL CATASTROPHIC ACT

(Mr. JAMES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JAMES. Madam Speaker, I rise today to express my full support of the Donnelly/Archer amendment to repeal the medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. Although well-intentioned, this program has not only fallen short of its purpose of meeting seniors' catastrophic health care costs, the program's so-called supplemental premium has created a catastrophic expense for the very people it was meant to help.

More than 5,000 of my constituents have contacted me to express their opposition to the current form of the Medicare Catastrophic Program. They have numerous reasons for their views which I understand and share. One reason is that many seniors already have private coverage of catastrophic health care expenses. A second reason is the supplemental premium, which can cost as much as $1,600 per couple per year.

My constituents want this program repealed, and they want their Congress to craft a program to meet the Nation's long-term-care needs. This important task should not—and cannot—be achieved on the House floor. Let us not do a "cut and paste" job on such an important program. Let us support an outright repeal of the catastrophic program so we can meet our constituents' pleas and move on to crafting a true workable program.

REPEAL THE CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE PROGRAM

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Madam Speaker, repeal, repeal, repeal. My constituents have spoken. These trays represent more than 20,000 responses from the seniors in the Second District of Maryland who object to being taxed via the existing catastrophic health bill. There are 58.9 percent of my constituents who want total repeal. Of the remaining 41.1 percent, they want a delay of 1 year while a blue-ribbon bipartisan commission studies the Nation's whole health picture. However, if a delay is not possible with such a commission, then that same 41 percent want the bill repealed.

Fewer than one-tenth of 1 percent have asked for one of the alternate proposals.

I want to point out to my colleagues that my seniors are typical middle class Americans who made provision for their retirement while they were employed. My constituents want an "aye" vote on the Archer/Donnelly amendment.

OPPOSITION TO H.R. 3, THE HAWKINS-DOWNEY BILL

(Mr. HOLLOWAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Madam Speaker, the language in H.R. 3 governing title II, title III, and title IV clearly states that "no child care provider receiving financial assistance under this subchapter shall engage in any sectarian activity, including sectarian worship and instruction, in the program for which such assistance is received."

Churches are currently providing one-third of the center-based care in the U.S. today and have been most instrumental in our inner cities. Many inner city churches have chosen to respond to the poor's need for child care and have made a life-changing impression on disadvantaged youth in our Nation. Michael Novak of the American Enterprise Institute has reported that black male teenagers with religious values in the inner city today are 47 percent less likely to drop out of school; 54 percent less likely to use drugs; and 50 percent less likely to engage in criminal activity.

In theory if these religious providers abandoned their religious activities they could receive funds through Hawkins-Downey, but ony if they abided by a wide range of regulations including State control of their choices for program administrators and staff selection. Obviously few, if any, religious childcare providers are going to let the State control the choice of their staffs and few will remove all religious traces from their programs. Therefore, Hawkins-Downey will cut them out of the process.

In addition to the religious discrimination in Hawkins-Downey there are other provisions which are just as bad. The bureaucracy created by this bill is unbelievable.

It sets in motion 150 new regulations on State governments receiving daycare funds.

It also requires each State receiving Federal daycare funds to create a "child development council" for each local government. If every State were to accept Federal daycare funds under the legislation, over 38,000 local child development councils would need to be created. Each council is required to submit reports to the State government every 4 years. Which means by the year 2000 over 120,000 Government reports on daycare would be required.

H.R. 3 is such a bureaucratic mess. Under this bill a grandmother caring for her own grandchild has to comply with regulations including building standards in her home, safety standards, nutrition standards, injury prevention and treatment regulations, child abuse regulations and health regulations. In addition, the grandmother would be subject to inspections by the State government to make sure she was caring for her grandchild in a manner that made the State happy.

For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to "Just say no" to Hawkins-Downey.

TOWNHALL MEETINGS IN OKLAHOMA AGAINST CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE PROGRAM

(Mr. INHOFE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INHOFE. Madam Speaker, we have heard a lot today about catastrophic health, and we are going to hear a lot more, but this is nothing compared to what we have heard at our townhall meetings back in Oklahoma. I have over 5,000 names on petitions of people saying, "We don't want the catastrophic health bill that was passed."

We have yet to have 1 person out of over 20 meetings say that they like the bill as it is, so I think we need to admit that we have made a mistake. It was wrong. The benefits are wrong. The surtax is wrong.

The only decision today is do we repeal it or do we amend it? I do not believe you can Band-Aid this one. I think the patient is dead.

I do not think there is anything more refreshing to the people of America than to have us stand up in these hallowed halls and say, "We made a mistake. We're going to correct it."

A few minutes ago from this podium one of my colleagues said that we do not want to throw the baby out with the bath water. Madam Speaker, I think it is time to throw out the bath water, throw out the baby, and start over again.

VOTE "NO" ON STARK-GRADISON AMENDMENT

(Mr. KYL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KYL. Madam Speaker, if we thought that the seniors of this country were upset over the Catastrophic Health Care Act, "We ain't seen nothin yet," if we are so foolish as to pass the Stark-Gradison amendment later on today.

There is little doubt that the public outcry from our seniors will result in the repeal of the act. We will do that today; but my colleagues, do not think for a minute that you can vote for repeal of the act and then do the seniors a favor by voting for Stark-Gradison. If we do that, our seniors will rightly come down on us like a ton of bricks.

Stark-Gradison will become an epithet as harsh as the Catastrophic Health Care Act. It takes the one noncatastrophic provision from the act, drugs, and recodifies it, but with a catch. Now instead of the drug benefit being paid for mostly by seniors of more financial means, all seniors will have to pay for it equally as part of the part B premium. That is a $10.20 per month increase by the year 1993.

"Don't do me any more of your favors," our seniors are saying. Vote "no" on Stark-Gradison.

VOTE FOR ARCHER-DONNELLY AMENDMENT TO REPEAL CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE PROGRAM

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Madam Speaker, seniors not only in my district but throughout the Nation sent a message to Washington. That message is "repeal the unfair and discriminatory supplemental surtax."

We cannot and I will not ignore the wishes of my constituents. I will vote in favor of the Archer-Donnelly amendment to repeal the entire catastrophic program.

It is unfortunate that once again we have a good idea gone bad. When this idea was first proposed, the intent was to provide seniors with long-term care coverage for catastrophic illness. Ultimately, what was signed into law was a program which ended up providing what amounted to a duplication of coverage for many seniors who already had such coverage through their existing health care plans. The seniors who made sacrifices and made provisions to insure they would be taken care of in their old age were the very seniors who were being asked to foot the bill. No wonder we and that is a collective we have received thousands upon thousands of letters and telegrams expressing in very strong terms the total dislike the seniors feel about this law. Never before have we heard such an outcry of total outrage and disgust about a law.

My major concern now is what will happen to the seniors who could not afford to pay the supplemental premium and retain their current insurance plan and so discontinued whatever MediGap plan they had prior to mandatory participation in the Catastrophic Coverage Program. Will these seniors experience yet another form of discrimination. Will they be denied reentry into their previous plan or have to pay out more money to receive what they had prior to enactment of this unpopular law?

While I disagree with the financing mechanism used to fund this program, I earnestly hope that we can find a way to provide medical and hospital protection to seniors who might be in need of such services. I look forward to working with my colleagues in addressing the true health care needs of our senior citizens and also of insuring that whatever problems should arise as a result of repealing this most unpoplar law can be rectified.

SUPPORT THE DONNELLY-ARCHER REPEAL AMENDMENT

(Mr. SLAUGHTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia. Madam Speaker, today the House has an opportunity to admit the catastrophic error we made in passing the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act, by supporting the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment.

I was 1 of 72 Members here in the House who voted against the conference report on catastrophic, and I still oppose it because of the steep tax increase on the elderly, the duplicated benefits for many, its lack of long-term care assistance, and because it will bankrupt the Medicare trust funds.

While I would support a meaningful and financially sound reform of the catastrophic program—one that repeals the surtax, provides access to effective catastrophic coverage for all Americans, and focuses Government assistance in this area on those truly in need—I cannot support the Ways and Means proposal for many reasons. For example, it threatens the stability of the Medicare trust funds due to the shifting of costly benefits to part A.

Madam Speaker, today the House has an opportunity and a responsibility, as the body most responsive to the people, to take corrective action. I urge my colleagues to support the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment.

MAJOR CONCERN IS LONG-TERM CUSTODIAL CARE

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Madam Speaker, I am proud to stand here as 1 of the 72 people who voted against this catastrophic care bill back when we first brought this thing up. At that time many of us were accused of being antiseniors, and these attacks were launched.

I hate to say "I told you so," Madam Speaker, but I do think that we are right, and the American people have found that we were right, and virtually every bit of testimony that was piled up was the reason that I voted against it.

I am convinced that we are doing the right thing. The unfortunate thing is this other proposal we have is not addressing the major concern which seniors have, their major concern, which is not availability of drugs. It is long-term custodial care. That is what they are concerned about, and we should be dealing with it.

Unfortunately this Waxman-Stark substitute proposal which we are going to have does not address it at all. We should vote yes on repeal and no on that package.

WORLD CONTRACT BRIDGE CHAMPIONSHIP

(Mr. STANGELAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STANGELAND. Madam Speaker, for the first time in the history of World Contract Bridge Championships, the United States won the World Olympiad Open Championship in Venice, Italy, last year. At the final ceremonies on Saturday, October 22, Dan Morse of Houston, captain of the U.S. team, accepted the Vanderbilt Cup.

Seymon Deutsch of Laredo, TX, the only American who had never won a world championship, called the victory "the thrill of a lifetime."

Bob Hamman and Bobby Wolff, both of Dallas, were partners in winning Bermuda Bowl championships in 1970, 1971, 1977, 1983, 1985, and 1987. They also won the 1974 World Open Pairs, and Wolff has won the World Mixed Teams. Hamman and Wolff rank first and second in world bridge standings for the United States over the past 20 years.

James Jacoby of Richardson, TX, was winning his third world championship—he was on the victorious Bermuda Bowl teams of 1970 and 1971.

Eric Rodwell of West Lafayette, IN, and Jeff Meckstroth of Columbus, OH, both in their early thirties, also have won two previous world championships—the Bermuda Bowl in 1981, and the World Open Pairs in 1986.

Americans now own all world bridge titles except one—the Olympiad Women's Teams, which was won in Venice by Demark. The United States is the champion in the Bermuda Bowl Open Teams, the Venice Trophy Women's Teams, the Rosenblum Knockout Teams, the World Open Pairs, and the World Mixed Pairs.

Congratulations to the American Contract Bridge League.

TRIBUTE TO MALCOM RANDALL

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Madam Speaker, today I rise to honor a man who has dedicated more than 50 years of his life to the Federal Government and has spent a majority of that working to improve health care services for our Nation's veterans.

Malcom Randall has been the Medical Director of the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Gainesville since the hospital opened in 1973. In that time, he has been instrumental in overseeing both the daily operations of the hospital and the long-term service goals of the center and Medical District 12. His tireless efforts have made the Gainesville VA medical center one of the best in the country. His enthusiasm for the job and his dedication to the veterans of Florida are to be commended.

I have had the pleasure of working with Malcom on a project to bring a badly needed psychiatric facility to the State of Florida, and in getting to know him I can state this unequivocally—unequivocally Florida's veterans deserve the best, and they have that in Malcom Randall. I am proud to know and work with him, and look forward to continuing to work together with him to give our Nation's veterans the first class health care they need.

VOTE FOR REAL REPEAL, NOT PHONY REPEAL

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, later today we will have a chance to deal with the catastrophic health program and what this House now wants to do.

The issue before us will be whether or not we want to repeal the program or whether or not we want to have a phony repeal of the program. Repeal of the program involves the Donnelly-Archer amendment. The Donnelly-Archer amendment would repeal the program and get rid of it.

We are going to have another amendment on the floor that seeks to keep portions of the program including the prescription drug program. We have heard from a number of organizations telling us we ought to vote for that program, many of the same organizations who told us to vote for the catastrophic program in the first place, and they were terribly wrong. They are wrong now again.

Why are they wrong? Because this bill will raise the premiums for seniors, substantially; in other words, hike the cost to them and have them pay for the costs of other people who are nonseniors. For example, AIDS patients are still going to be covered under this program, so we will have senior citizens, most of whom are not in the AIDS-patient category, paying for drugs for AIDS patients under this particular approach. It is wrong. It should be voted down.

There have been hearings on this particular bill, and we ought to vote for real repeal, not phony repeal.

DEAL WITH COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH PACKAGE

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Without objection, the gentleman from New Mexico is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Madam Speaker, when we consider the budget reconciliation package, we should repeal the catastrophic bill, but let us recognize that many of us supported this bill a year ago. I was one of those who lauded it, and expansion of Medicare. It was strongly needed. The purposes are there. We do need catastrophic.

Obviously we made a mistake in the payment schedule, but by repealing catastrophic, we cannot retreat into saying that this is the end of trying to deal with health care.

Madam Speaker, we have to deal with the comprehensive health package, and it is going to cost money, and it should deal with home care, with hospital care, across-the-board nursing home, but let us not think that this vote which is needed is going to cure all ills.

Madam Speaker, let us bite the bullet and let us look at a combination of the Government and the private sector and recipients funding a major national health plan that will involve catastrophic and every facet of health care. Let us not go ahead with the demagoguery on repealing, because we know well, many of us, many, many, the majority of us, a Republican President, a Democratic House, a Democratic Senate supported this initiative.

Let us correct it.

Madam Speaker, when we consider the budget reconciliation package during the course of business this week, we must address one of the most controversial issues facing our Nation's elderly—the catastrophic health care bill—and when we take it up I will vote for full repeal.

I joined the majority of my colleagues in voting for this program when it was adopted last year. Like many, I thought it filled a great need and would have the support of our Nation's elderly.

When my constituents started to complain about the catastrophic bill, I patiently tried to explain its many benefits—they were not satisfied. When the Ways and Means Committee adopted its proposed changes I took it before my constituents again—they were still not satisfied. After many discussions and much introspection, I determined it was time to admit that the catastrophic bill was a mistake and must be repealed.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting to repeal the catastrophic bill. We should not let our pride keep us from undoing our mistake.

To those in the Congress and the administration who argue that we cannot repeal the catastrophic bill because it will add to the deficit I say: Shame on you for trying to reduce the deficit on the back of the elderly.

Let us take this opportunity to repeal catastrophic and review our priorities anew. My constituents are more interested in long-term health care than catastrophic. Let us put this episode behind us and start addressing the real needs of our Nation's elderly.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Madam Speaker, due to unavoidable circumstances I was absent from the floor yesterday and missed the three votes cast by the House.

Had I been present I would have voted:

"Yes" on rollcall 258, the Steel Trade Liberalization Program;

"Yes" on rollcall 259, the Torture Victim Protection Act; and

"Yes" on rollcall 260, the Judge Walter L. Nixon impeachment.

CORRECTING REQUEST OF MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1989, FOR CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2788, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990, TO PROVIDE FOR READING OF MOTIONS IN DISAGREEMENT

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, in the RECORD of yesterday I made a unanimous-consent request to consider the conference report and Senate amendments in disagreement on the bill, H.R. 2788, today or any day thereafter, and there was incorrectly included the waiver of reading of motions to dispose of amendments in disagreement.

The distinguished Member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER], called my attention to it, and I told him that I would correct it.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct that order so as to merely waive the reading of the conference report and Senate amendments, but not motions to dispose of those amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only to thank the gentleman for making that correction. The way it read in the RECORD would have been a problem, it seems to me, in terms of precedent. I know what the gentleman's intent was.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for bringing that to my attention.

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2788, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of Monday, October 2, 1989, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2788) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of Monday, October 2, 1989, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of Monday, Oct. 2, 1989, at p. 22674.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Madam Speaker, I have been in the House for 40 years. I have been attending conferences of the Appropriations Committee for that period of time, and in all that time I do not remember any conference that was so difficult, so controversial, and so emotional as the one whose bill we bring to the floor today. It was fraught with explosiveness. That we came in with a report at all is amazing. That we achieved one that everybody seems to concede is so good is almost miraculous.

There were a number of controversial amendments that seemed almost beyond solution when we began our discussions. For one thing, Madam Speaker, the amendment that led to more publicity and more controversy than any other, of course, was the Helms amendment dealing with obscenity and pornography. We had to deal with this in the glare of publicity that usually accompanies some lurid trial like that of the traffic violation of Zsa Zsa Gabor.

We have resolved our differences. I notice in the paper the other day that Senator HELMS claimed victory. I think that is quite an exaggeration. I think it is somewhat euphemistic. I think what happened was that we reached an agreement, one that if I had my druthers I would rather not have seen. But this was a conference, Madam Speaker. Concessions had to be made, and some concessions will be made, and I will discuss that amendment in a moment.

Another amendment that was in very great dispute was the so-called Hatfield-Adams amendment which had been filed in the Senate by the distinguished Senators from Oregon and Washington in order to deal with an economic crisis which followed a court suit. The injunctions which resulted from the suit slowed down the timber industry in the entire Northwest. It dealt with an emotional issue, the issue of protecting a bird called the spotted owl. More than 100 Members of the House sent the conferees a letter asking that we oppose Hatfield-Adams.

I must say, Madam Speaker, that when we concluded our agreement I received a letter from one of the leaders of that group which congratulated us upon the results of the conference and thanked us for the solution we had reached.

Another item that was in dispute related to the Senate disposition to strike out all the land acquisition and construction items which had been requested by Members of the House and inserting requests by the Senate in place of them. That was a subject for bargaining back and forth, and I think that we have satisfactorily resolved that dispute as well.

We had to find an agreement on a major lobbying reporting bill which had been passed in the Senate and which we considered in the House and received House support for, but it still had a number of provisions in it that required consideration, and rearrangement and adjustment.

Madam Speaker, there were more than 167 items that were in dispute in the bill. All of them have been resolved. All of the conferees have signed the conference report except that Senator LEAHY was not present yesterday so that he could sign it, but I am told that he favored the report.

Before I turn to the matters that we have covered. Madam Speaker, let me first sound an honor roll, an honor roll for an assembly of members on our staff who deserve medals for their work, not only for what they did last week, which was above and beyond the call of duty, but for their work throughout the year and throughout the years in which they have done the people's work. Very few know about them. They are hardworking stiffs, men and women who do not know weariness, they do not know surrender, who do their jobs without the honors that we Members get, but whose excellent work gives us the opportunity to shine in public view.

There comes to mind so frequently the wonderful play by Edmond Rostand, Cyrano de Bergerac. Members will recall, Madam Speaker, the various scenes where Cyrano wrote the script for Christian to woo Roxanne, and while Christian ascended the balcony to claim his reward with a kiss from Roxanne, there was Cyrano on the ground after having won him that opportunity. So speaking for all the members of our subcommittee, I want to thank the members of the staff for having done so well not only in their work for the public, but for the members of the subcommittee as well.

I would be remiss, Madam Speaker, if I did not recite their names so that they might be inscribed as a roll of honor in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There is the chief of staff, Neal Sigmon. There is his associate, Bob Kripowicz. There is Kathy Johnson, who everybody, including the staff, says did a perfectly magnificent job in helping to bring resolution to so many complicated matters in the conference in connection with the Hatfield-Adams amendment. There is Loretta Beaumont. There is the assistant to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. RALPH REGULA, Barbara Wainman, and my assistant, Adrianne Moss. Finally, Madam Speaker, there is Angie Perry. Angie has the task of getting all of our work in shape.

I want also to compliment all of the members of our subcommittee who do so well, such as my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. RALPH REGULA, who is the ranking member and as fine a Member in the House as I have ever known in the 40 years of my membership here. There is the gentleman from Washington, Mr. NORM DICKS, the gentleman from Oregon, Mr. LES AUCOIN, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CHET ATKINS. CHET deserves also a special accolade in bringing agreement from some very stubborn Members from the Northwest who finally realized that this was a conference and that they had to make some concessions, which they could make in all honor.

That was done. Also members of our committee who are chairmen of other subcommittees who deserve recognition: the chairman of our full committee, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WHITTEN; and the ranking member, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CONTE; also the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BEVILL, all of whom deserve recognition.

But of course again I return to the staff. The staff work was topnotch.

Let me turn, Mr. Speaker, to the first of the amendments that were in disagreement: the Helms amendment.

Each side gave a little. The agreement recognizes that there may be some grants that some would consider obscene and that factor becomes one that has to be considered in the grant-making process.

But that is one factor that the Chairman of NEA and NEH must consider; they must decide what grants to approve. It is a difficult situation. We need good chairmen. We have a good Chairman at NEH in Lynne Cheney.

We have one who has been appointed by the President to be head of NEA and who, according to reports coming out of this Senate hearing, appears to be and promises to be outstanding.

Of course that is John Frohnmeyer.

I think our agreement has preserved the integrity of NEA; it countinues to preserve the great tradition of freedom of artistic expression which is the basic premise upon which NEA and NEH are founded and which is the rationale for Federal funding for the arts and the humanities.

In the course of our discussions we came to the conclusion that the procedures of NEA were not as good as we would have wanted, that they deserved review.

Senator MCCLURE had previously put an amendment into the Senate bill which would have provided $100,000 to review the panel system which is the basic framework upon which the work of NEA and NEH are founded.

We accept that amendment. We think it is a good idea. But we want to expand it to include not only the procedures of the panels but the procedures of NEA as well.

We have provided in this bill for the appointment of a commission to review the procedures of NEA and NEH and the panel system, and we have gone further, Madam Speaker. We have provided for a review of the question which was raised so much in the course of the debates in the House and in the Senate in connection with this issue, that is: Is there a fundamental difference between the funding of federally funded arts, grants and, non-federally grants? Should there be a different standard of approval between federally funded grants and non-federally funded grants? And we have, as I say, provided for the appointment of a commission to be made up of four members appointed by the Speaker of the House, four members by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and four members by the President of the United States to report back within 180 days of the effective date of this act.

We have provided the sum of $250,000 for that purpose. With respect to other features of the bill, Madam Speaker, in the course of the discussions we found occasion to review.

Madam Speaker, we bring back to the House today the conference report on the bill H.R. 2788 making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for fiscal year 1990. I am pleased to bring this conference report back to the House. The total recommended for the bill is $11,180,742,000, an increase of $116,855,000 over the amount passed by the House on June 12, 1989. None of the overall increase is for discretionary appropriations. The entire increase is related to firefighting which is a mandatory item and for which later estimates show the need for larger appropriations. Most importantly, the agreement is within the 302(b) allocation for both budget authority and outlays. It was very difficult for the conferees to resolve the differences between the House and Senate bills to bring back a bill which stayed within the deficit reduction targets yet protected the Federal natural resource programs under our jurisdiction.

In addition to the appropriations in the bill, the conferees had to consider three controversial areas which were very difficult to resolve and of which most of you are aware. These items were the so-called Byrd amendment on lobbying, timber sales levels in the Northwest in areas containing spotted owls, and the National Endowment for the Arts' grantmaking process and the question of the standards applied to such grants. These issues made this the most difficult and complex conference with which I have ever been associated. It is a tribute to the members of the conference that we are able to present reasonable agreements to you on all these issues as well as on the myriad items in disagreement between the two Houses in the regular appropriations accounts.

The conferees have accepted the Senate lobbying amendment with changes that raise the cut off point for contracts to which it is applied, clarify what activity may be undertaken with appropriated funds, provide a range of civil penalties, and generally clarify the amendment's applicability. The amendment remains essentially intact, as was the desire of the House, expressed when it voted to instruct the conferees on the bill.

Another of the many difficult issues the managers had to contend with in this conference was the amendment added by the Senate which set certain timber sale levels for the States of Oregon and Washington, and provided that there would be no judicial review of such sales for the next year. It took many hours of negotiation involving many people—but in particular three members of the subcommittee, Mr. ATKINS, Mr. AUCOIN, and Mr. DICKS—to reach a compromise on this difficult issue. Basically, the revised amendment reduces somewhat the timber sales program for fiscal years 1989 and 1990, from 10 billion board feet to 9,600 million board feet; it calls for larger areas of protection on a temporary basis, for the northern spotted owl, which is being considered for listing as a threatened or endangered species; it provides for minimizing the fragmentation of old growth timber stands; it allows individual timber sales to be challenged in court for violation of environmental or other laws, under expedited procedures; and it calls upon the Forest Service to review and revise its original record of decision with regard to managing habitat for the spotted owl, using new information available, including the guidelines to be developed by the recently established interagency scientific committee in the next 6 to 9 months.

This provision is only an interim solution to the crisis that has arisen in the Pacific Northwest States over this issue. It is hoped that the efforts now underway, such as the work of the interagency scientific committee, as well as the efforts by the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management called for in this provision, will result in a management framework for future years that will more fully address the concerns raised in the recent court suits on this issue.

The final controversy pertained to congressional and public reaction to two grants made in the National Endowment for the Arts' grantmaking process. The conferees agreed, based on the circumstances surrounding the two grants; one for a photography exhibit of works by Robert Mapplethorpe, and one for a fellowship for Andres Serrano, that provisions were needed in the bill to: First, prohibit funding for grants to be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials which in the judgment of the Endowments for the Arts and the Humanities may be considered obscene; second, state the sense of the Congress on issues relating to the Endowments' grantmaking process; and third, establish a commission to review the grantmaking process as well as to consider whether standards for publicly funded art should be different than those for privately funded art. The solution seems a reasonable compromise. It is clear that many, including myself, would prefer other options, but it is equally clear that none of us will be able to get everything we want on this issue. I have agreed to this solution, reluctantly, and my fervent hope is that the overwhelming volume of good work done by the Arts Endowment is not eclipsed by this controversy.

The issues I have just discussed tend to relegate the essential appropriations contained in the rest of the conference agreement to a secondary status. Of major importance are agreements which:

First, continue selective moratoria on oil and gas leasing in frontier offshore areas;

Second, fund Department of the Interior programs at a level of $5,318,403,000, including $311,500,000 to fund both fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1990 firefighting costs;

Third, provide for a fourth and fifth procurement for clean coal technology in the Department of Energy at a level of $1.2 billion in 1991 and 1992 to assist in fighting acid rain problems;

Fourth, continue substantial required support for a balanced program in our national forests by providing $2,255,320,000 for the Forest Service, including $561,139,000 for fiscal year 1989 and 1990 firefighting;

Fifth, provide funds to fill the strategic petroleum reserve at a level of 50,000 barrels a day;

Sixth, sustain support for health services to native Americans at a level of $1,256,906,000;

Seventh, continue adequate support for the other agencies in the bill;

Eighth, continue and increase funding from the land and water conservation fund for which $232,589,000 is provided; and

Ninth, provide at least a 5-percent increase for all park units with up to a 15-percent increase for fee collecting parks.

Madam Speaker, the conferees have struggled to fit our programs within the 302(b) allocation. We have succeeded and we believe we have made this a good bill. It continues important programs necessary for the protection and enhancement of our natural resources while maintaining fiscal responsibility and providing substantial return to the Treasury. I want to commend all the conferees for their unselfish efforts and contributions in rising to this difficult fiscal challenge. In particular, I want to note the contributions of our ranking minority member, RALPH REGULA. I urge Members on both sides of the aisle to support the conference report.

For further clarification, I am placing a support table into the RECORD to accompany this statement.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the Interior Appropriations conference report. I appreciate the chairman's comments. He has covered it well.

There are a few things I might highlight.

Madam Speaker, I have served on this subcommittee for 15 years and I do not believe we have ever had a more difficult conference.

I would congratulate the chairman. If it were not for his stalwartness, his tenacity, and most importantly his spirit of compromise, we might never have gotten to this point today.

It was difficult, there were a great variety of opinions on many different subjects in the conference.

This report covers $11 billion, a number of agencies, dozens of grants, and many projects that Members were interested in, both in the House and in the Senate.

The fact that we were constrained by having only so much money to spend made our task even more difficult.

Usually in a conference, if all else fails, disagreements can be resolved by splitting the difference. But it was not easy to do that here because many of the issues were a matter of principle, a matter of policy rather than a matter of money.

The one that divided us perhaps the most was the so-called or well-publicized Helms amendment. We have to make clear that no one in this House, no one in the Senate supports tax funded pornography. They do not support pornography that is not tax funded. I think that is a general agreement. We could agree on that in the conference.

But when we attempted to translate that fact into statutory language and preserve the freedom of artistic expression, it became more difficult. Fortunately the chairman was up to the test. I think we have drafted a compromise which prohibts the funding of obscene art. Unlike the Helms amendment, the bill before you today makes it clear that the Endowments are ultimately responsible for monitoring the content of the work they fund.

That was one of the problems with the Helms amendment. There was not a clear definition of accountability.

We have done that. We have said very clearly that the Endowments are responsible for what they fund. Further, the standard has some basis in law because it was drawn in part from the 1973 Miller versus California Supreme Court decision on obscenity, where the court attempted to spell out some standards.

We tried to incorporate these. For those who might have missed it, I would note to you that there was an up-or-down vote on the Helms amendment in the Senate. I believe it was Thursday night. The Helms amendment was defeated by a vote of 65 to 31. That made it even more vital that we reach a strong position and a good compromise on this bill.

Specifically the NEA and NEH are prohibited from using Federal funds to "promote, disseminate or produce obscene material including, but not limited to, depictions of Sado-masochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children or individuals engaged in sex acts and which taken as a whole do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value."

That language came from the Miller case in which the Supreme Court has spoken very clearly. This is tough language.

I think it will do a great deal to solve the problem.

But we went beyond that. We went beyond the Helms amendment and established an independent commission to further review the NEA's grant-making procedures to determine whether new standards are needed.

One of the problems that caused the difficulty that we are into here is the fact that the grant-making procedure was not clearly set out as far as accountability is concerned. What we hope will come out of this independent commission, which will be appointed by the President with the advice of the leadership in the House and the Senate, will be standards that will prevent anything like what we have seen in the past happening in the future. I think this will be very helpful to the authorizing committee because the National Endowment for the Arts does need to be reauthorized before we do the fiscal 1991 appropriation.

Criteria to be considered include possible standards where: First, applying the contemporary community standards would find that the work taken as a whole appeals to a prurient interest; second, that the work depicts or describes in a patently offensive way sexual conduct; and third, the work taken as a whole lacks serious artistic and cultural value.

The Commission is directed to report back in 180 days, and it is our hope that this report will be useful to the reauthorization process and to all Members who will have to decide, eventually, in voting for a reauthorization bill, what we want to happen.

The compromise sends a strong message to the Endowments, but at the same time preserves the freedom of artistic expression, so critical to the core of the Endowments.

Finally, the conference agreed, as overwhelmingly instructed by this body, to adopt the Byrd amendment with respect to lobbying. I think that that vote said clearly that we are concerned. This is an outgrowth of the HUD scandal, and we are concerned that there is sunshine on lobbying efforts, that there not be the use of Federal dollars for the purpose of lobbying.

As I said earlier on the floor during the debate on the motion to instruct, this amendment addresses a longstanding concern of mine and that is the question of ensuring disclosure with respect to the use of public funds.

Waste, abuse, and conflict of interest with respect to Federal tax dollars destroys public confidence in their Government. The amendment prohibits the recipients of Federal grants, contracts, loans, or cooperative agreements from using Federal funds to pay persons to influence or attempt to influence executive or legislative decisions, made in connection with the awarding of any contract, grant, loan, or cooperative agreement.

The amendment does not destroy lobbying activity. That is fundamental to our democracy, that people have a right to be heard. They have a right to petition their Government, and they have a right to have someone do it on their behalf. However, the Byrd amendment merely ensures full disclosure, and that is the key, of the extent of the lobbying activity that is going on in connection with the awarding of Federal funds. The mere perception that an agency and/or legislative decisionmakers are being unduly influence by factors other than the merits of a proposal, undermines the public's confidence, and must be addressed. We have done so in the conference agreement before Members today.

We have spent an unusual amount of time during prior debates on this bill on issues such as the arts issue, and in the process, many of the good initiatives in this bill have gone unnoticed. I am going to highlight a few. This is an $11 billion package, and it makes a lot of policy by the way in which we expend these funds. They are all discretionary. Therefore, the bill, in its assignment of funding for various dollar projects, is, in fact, a very important policy statement. We have heard for years about the unmet needs for recreational facilities in the Forest Service, and I might say in all of the services that we address. It is often ignored, but the Forest Service has 2½ times the number of visitor days as the National Park Service. We have addressed that problem by providing $12.5 million for recreation construction projects in the National Forest System. I wish we could do more, because as our population grows and the pressures of our fast-moving society grow, we need more opportunities for people to have recreational experiences, and we need to expand this as much as possible.

We have attempted to address the growing maintenance needs of our Federal lands. I would point out that this bill covers one-third of the United States, the land area that is owned by the Federal Government, which encompasses about 750 million acres. Agencies funded include the Bureau of Land Management, the Forest Service and the National Park Service, Fish and Wildlife Service, and there are a lot of unmet operation and maintenance needs out there, and we obviously cannot address them all. However, I think we need to continue the effort as we did in this bill.

In the Fish and Wildlife, we increased their O&M account by $22 plus million. The National Park Service we increased over last year by $40.7 million. In the Forest Service, we increased $13.8 million. As I said before, there is much more to be done. The same thing is true of land acquisition. We need to fill in the gaps. We need to buy the areas surrounding the parks, to provide environmental protection on the boundaries. We provided in the bill $232.5 million for land acquisition, again, a very strong and good feature of this bill.

The bill also takes a major step toward addressing the Nation's acid rain problem by providing advance funding of $1.2 billion for a fourth and fifth round of clean coal projects, and fully funding the third round solicitation which has already gone out and for which we have received 48 responses. As we debate the Clean Air Act, and that is coming down the track, in the months ahead, we need to continue our efforts on the Clean Coal Program. Coal is one of the great energy resources that this Nation has. We are fast approaching dependency on oil imports of over 50 percent. I think it is absolutely vital to our Nation's energy future that we develop an environmentally safe way to burn coal. Our commitment in this bill is an important policy statement, $1.2 billion for fiscal 1990.

This, added with what has been done in the past, plus the private sector commitment of money puts a total of almost $6 billion being spent today on clean coal technology. I hope that in the Clean Air Act that we will be passing in the future, that we allow the time necessary to utilize this research.

I cannot begin to enumerate all the good that will be done by the projects in this bill. I want to assure my colleagues that within the limits of the budget constraints that we had from our allocation from the Committee on the Budget, we have done all that is possible to meet the needs of the Indian tribes, the parks, wildlife refuges, and forests, that Members have identified. We had something like 350 Member requests for projects within their districts, and we did all that was possible with the resources available to meet these needs.

I certainly join my chairman in commending this conference report, and I will be pleased to answer questions. I might also add to what the chairman said, we had super work by the staff of the subcommittee, as well as my own staff, and they worked in a very bipartisan fashion. The conference was bipartisan, the work of the subcommittee is bipartisan. We have made every effort to bring to Members a bill, today, that I think is a very responsible bill, addressing the challenges that we have in this subcommittee.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes, to make one point clear. That is, as the result of the agreement on the obscenity question, the conferees agree that the question of obscenity becomes one factor in the consideration of grants. It may have been a factor before this change, but it did not have the weight that the conference agreement has ascribed to it for future consideration.

I must point out, Madam Speaker, that it remains only one factor in the composite of factors that go into grant making. It must be pointed out that the ultimate test for continuing grant making is artistic excellence, art of the highest quality. If the application does not possess excellence or art of the highest quality, whether it is obscene or not, the grant should not be approved.

Under the decision of the conferees, and keeping in mind the fact that the conferees were very much aware of the standard in law as it now exists, and the standards that are set forth in the case of Miller versus California, if there is a question of obscenity in the grant, then that becomes a factor. It is within the discretion of the chairman, either of NEA or NEH, to consider whether the artistic excellence, the social merit in the grant is such that it far outweighs any question of impropriety.

I thought I should make that clear.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to a member of the subcommittee who was extremely helpful in putting this bill together and reaching the compromises that were necessary, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report, and I urge all Members to accept the committee's recommendations.

This conference report is the result of weeks of tough compromise and hard negotiations. In addition to the thousands of line items in the bill, the conferees were faced with several mega-issues, including arts funding, endangered species and the timber program, truth-in-lobbying legislation, among many, many others. I want to commend SID YATES and RALPH REGULA for fairly and effectively dealing with these difficult issues. Not everyone is happy with the results, but that's the product of good faith dealing and give-and-take negotiations.

I want to especially note the increase in the land acquisition program, a major initiative of the Bush environmental agenda. The committee included many of the specific projects requested by the administration, and the overall funding is within striking distance of the President's plan. These funds will go a long way to protecting the most fragile and sensitive areas of the country for generations to come. In addition, the conferees addressed many other issues and objections presented to the committee by OMB. For the RECORD, I will include a copy of the statement of the administration policy given to the conferees before conference. As reported, this conference report is under the House 302-B allocation for budget authority and outlays, and of course, it's under the levels approved by the House last July. The conferees have struck a delicate balance. The report is fiscally sound, yet it responds to the many, many needs funded in this appropriations bill.

And the latest word from the administration is a bit indirect, but good nevertheless. I am told by the Office of Management and Budget that the administration is not urging Members to oppose this conference report. No statement of administration policy will be sent to the Congress, and it's the policy of OMB to send such messages if the President intends to veto the bill or if the President's senior advisors would recommend a veto. Getting to the bottom line, I think it is safe to say that this conference report as presented to the House will be signed by the President.

Mr. Speaker, this is only the third conference report to be considered by the House. The energy and water bill was signed last Friday, and the legislative bill is pending in the Senate. However, I should warn Members that a Gramm-Rudman sequester looms on the horizon. Because the reconciliation bill has languished and suffocated under its own weight, this bill and all others completed by the committee will suffer a direct hit from the meat ax of Gramm-Rudman. That means at least 5.3 percent reduction across-the-board for all discretionary programs. The Appropriations Committee is doing its job here. We're getting all the bills through conference. Treasury will file this week, and Labor/HHS is meeting today. But despite this progress, we are also taking a hit because the reconciliation process has broken down.

Mr. Speaker, to keep the process moving forward and to support a fiscally responsible bill, I urge all Members to support this conference report.

OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 7, 1989.

Hon. SILVIO CONTE,
Committee on Appropriations, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CONTE: As the House and the Senate prepare to confer on H.R. 2788, the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Bill, 1990, I am writing to express the Administration's views on the House bill and the Senate bill.

The Administration has serious concerns about both the House and Senate versions of H.R. 2788. Based on OMB scoring under the Bipartisan Budget Agreement, the House bill would provide domestic discretionary budget authority of $11,265 million, or $365 million more than the House Interior Subcommittee's 302(b) allocation. This would result in outlays of $10,791 million, or $441 million more than the House 302(b) allocation. The Senate bill would provide $10,939 million in domestic discretionary BA and $10,782 million in outlays. These levels would exceed the Senate 302(b) allocations by $419 million in BA and $512 million in outlays.

The Initial OMB Sequester Report of August 25th made clear that we have virtually no margin for expenditures above the 302(b) allocations if we are to avoid sequester. We therefore would respectfully urge the referees to find appropriate means to bring the bill down to the 302(b) level.

Much of the increased funding is earmarked for specific groups or for activities at specific locations. Such earmarking is excessive and usually does not result in the most productive expenditure of funds. Instead, the specific allocation of the funds should be based on the merits of the proposals, so long as they are in keeping with the overall purposes of the appropriations. Several areas of excessive earmarking are noted in the enclosure to this letter.

The Administration also opposes the Senate provision to extend coverage of the Federal Tort Claims Act to tribal contractors of their employees. The Department of Justice advises that if the provision is retained, the Attorney General would recommend veto of the bill to the President. The precedent of deeming contractors or their employees to be employees of the Federal Government is adverse. It is our view that the Federal government should not accept direct fiscal responsibility for professional negligence in the absence of an adequate opportunity to control and supervise professional conduct.

The Administration prefers the Senate position that pre-leasing activities in most Outer-Continental Shelf (OCS) areas be permitted, although we oppose restrictions on pre-leasing for any area. The Administration also continues to oppose the provisions extending moratori on leasing and exploration. The President is committed to proceeding with OCS development only if all appropriate environmental safeguards are in place. The President has established a task force to address environmental concerns regarding three controversial lease sales scheduled for FY 1990. It would be especially inappropriate at this time for Congress to prohibit pre-leasing activities. These provide the very information that is needed to make environmentally sound decisions on leasing and drilling.

The Administration is concerned about a number of other provisions, as outlined in the enclosure. We hope that the conferees report a bill that (1) continues to fund essential programs, and (2) addresses satisfactorily the issues raised by the Administration. Thank you for considering our views.

With best regards,

RICHARD G. DARMAN,
Director.

Enclosure.

INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1990

I. CONFORMANCE WITH BIPARTISAN BUDGET AGREEMENT AND 302(b) ALLOCATIONS

Under CBO scoring the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Bill would meet the requirements for the Bipartisan Budget Agreement (as measured by compliance with the respective House and Senate Subcommittees' 302(b) allocations). However, the Administration believes that the actual domestic discretionary spending levels in the bill are higher than indicated by CBO scoring. The attached bridge table shows that the House bill would actually provide domestic discretionary funding of $11,265 million in BA ($365 million more than the House 302(b) allocation) and outlays of $10,791 million ($441 million more than the 302(b) allocation). The Senate bill would provide $10,939 million in BA ($419 million more than the Senate 302(b) allocation) and $10,782 million in outlays ($512 million more than the 302(b) allocation).

The major increases over the CBO estimates due to OMB scoring are:

$198 million in BA and $139 million in outlays in the House bill, and $271 million in BA and $190 million in outlays in the Senate bill, for fire-fighting appropriations related to planned activities.

$120 million in BA and outlays in both the House and Senate bills for the appropriation of excess receipts from the sale of oil and gas from the Naval Petroleum Reserve (NPR). The Mid-Session Review of July 18, 1989, estimates NPR receipts at $630 million, while the House and Senate bills would provide, as a discretionary appropriation to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, receipts in excess of $510 million.

$47 million in BA and $37 million in outlays in the House bill, and $72 million in BA and $57 million in outlays in the Senate bill, for the appropriation of excess timber receipts.

II. MAJOR ADMINISTRATION OBJECTIONS TO NON-CONFERENCEABLE PROVISIONS

Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) Oil and Gas Leasing and Exploration Moratoria.—The Administration objects to "one year" leasing moratoria recommended in both the House and Senate bills.

The President established an inter-agency task force to address environmental concerns related to three scheduled FY 1990 OCS lease sales. It would be inappropriate to impose more OCS moratoria or to prohibit activities which are designed explicitly to provide the kind of information that can lead to environmentally sound drilling decisions. The Administration has pledged not to conduct OCS leasing or exploration in the areas under moratoria until after the task force has completed its work and the Administration has announced its decisions on the three FY 1990 sales under review.

Contacts Between Employees of the Department of the Interior and Members and Committees of Congress and their Staff.—Both the House and the Senate propose language that prohibits funds from being used to prepare reports on contacts between Interior employees and Congressional Members and staff. This provision is highly objectionable and raises Constitutional concerns. It interferes with the Department's ability to carry out Executive functions, and impairs the Department's efforts to act on congressional inquiries in a responsible manner.

III. ADMINISTRATION POSITION ON CONFERENCEABLE PROVISIONS

A. Funding levels

Department of the Interior

Both the House and Senate bills inappropriately address the deficit impact of forest fire-fighting appropriations by treating these appropriations as mandatory. The House places nearly all Interior and Agriculture fire-fighting funds ($740 million out of $761 million provided) in a new single account in Interior. While congressional scoring classifies the new account as mandatory, approximately $198 million of the appropriation would finance purely discretionary, planned activities. The Senate places $868 million ($312 million for Interior, and $556 million for Agriculture) in two separate new accounts. Approximately $271 million of this amount would finance discretionary activities.

Although certain fire-related costs are unpredictable and unavoidable (emergency suppression and rehabilitation), many fire-related costs are planned and programmed in advance (fire management and pre-suppression). Planned fire-fighting costs are discretionary and are scored that way by OMB for the Bipartisan Budget Agreement.

The House proposal to fund fire-fighting activities of two separate agencies from a single account would be administratively burdensome. The Senate addresses this concern by recommending separate Interior and Agriculture fire-fighting accounts. The Administration prefers the Senate position.

The Administration also supports the Senate recommendations on appropriations for Department of the Interior fire-fighting. The Senate would provide $213 million, which may be adequate both to repay FY 1989 emergency costs and to pay FY 1990 costs on an up-front basis. The House bill would provide only $200 million for FY 1989 and FY 1990 Interior fire-fighting costs.

While the House's recommendation may be sufficient to ensure that Interior's non-fire programs are reimbursed for FY 1989 transfers related to emergency fire costs, it is far short of what would be necessary to pay projected FY 1990 Interior fire costs. This would perpetuate the current cumbersome and misleading system of financing fire-fighting after-the-fact.

The Administration supports funding for Federal land acquisition at the level requested by the President ($207 million). This level would protect the Nation's highest-priority natural and cultural resources. While the House bill is close to both these objectives, the Senate bill provides only $177 million for Federal land acquisition. The Administration urges the conferees to refrain from simply adding together separate House and Senate acquisition lists to arrive at an overall appropriation well above the request.

The Administration objects to Interior Department construction funding that, in the House bill, is $181 million (115 percent) above the President's request and, in the Senate bill, is $162 million (103 percent) above the President's request. Much of the additional funding is unnecesary and directed at low-priority projects not in the Department's backlog of needed health and safety projects. The additional construction projects are generally discretionary or noncritical, and can be foregone or postponed. New construction is a lower-priority than providing quality operations, maintenance, and rehabilitation at existing facilities.

The Administration opposes increases above the request in both the House bill (+$90 million) and the Senate bill (+$100 million) for various lower-priority grants to States and non-Federal research institutes. Conferenceable items include Historic Preservation Fund grants, grants to mineral institutes, and Endangered Species Act grants. Although many purposes of these grants are admirable, such purposes already are funded adequately by the request or are the responsibility of State and local governments and the private sector.

The Administration objects to proposed increases over the request to fund lower-priority or special interest projects in various Interior operating and research accounts. In total and net of fire-fighting costs, these accounts would increase by $283 million (8 percent) in the House bill and by $204 million (6 percent) in the Senate bill over the request. The need for fiscal restraint dictates that all Federal spending be limited to the minimum necessary to address pressing, high-priority Federal responsibilities.

The House bill also increases by $148 million (16 percent), and the Senate bill by $48 million (5 percent), numerous Indian programs for education, social services, natural resource development, and trust responsibilities. Included in the House bill's $148 million is a $77 million BA adjustment (with no outlay impact) for conversion of certain Interior contracts with Indian tribes from a fiscal year to a calendar year basis as required by law. There is no objection to the BA proposed by the House for the one-time conversion.

Department of Agriculture

The Administration objects to the amendment passed by the Senate to decrease Forest Service road construction funds in order to finance a $40 million increase to various Interior Department and Forest Service accounts. The Administration's request represents the funding necessary to maintain a level of timber harvest commensurate with anticipated demand. The proposed reduction would reduce timber offered in FY 1990 by 2.4 billion board feet, resulting in a potential out-year loss in revenue exceeding $280 million. Furthermore, the proposed earmarking of $40 million from the construction account will fund either existing programs at levels higher than necessary or new proposals not requested by the Administration.

The Administration objects to significant increases in funding for Forest Service, State and Private Forestry. The House bill adds $41 million to the request, while the Senate bill adds $63 million, more than doubling the President's request of $49 million. The Senate increase includes a $6 million grant to the National Arbor Day Foundation for construction of a National Arbor Day Center in Nebraska City, Nebraska. The Administration urges the removal of funds designated for specific projects and for activities more appropriately funded by State, local, or private interests.

Department of Energy

The Administration urges the conferees to provide the full $710 million included in the President's budget for the Clean Coal Technology programs, instead of the $635 million recommended by the House or the $460 million recommended by the Senate.

The Administration urges the conferees to reduce funding for many projects earmarked to special interests and other low-priority research and development activities in the fossil energy and energy conservation accounts. The Administration opposes the significant increases over the request proposed by both the House (+$259 million or 158 percent) and the Senate (+$243 million or 149 percent) for fossil energy research and development. The Administration also opposes increases for energy conservation research and development (+$107 million in the House bill, and +$109 million in the Senate bill).

Department of Health and Human Services

The Administration objects to increases over the President's request of $181 million in the House bill and $142 million in the Senate bill for the Indian Health Service. The House and Senate increase funding over FY 1989 by 17 percent and 13 percent respectively, well above the estimated medical cost inflation rate of 6 percent. Included in these increases are funds for several earmarked, low-priority, special-interest projects.

National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities

The Administration prefers the Senate's recommended funding levels for the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Institute of Museum Services. The Senate's funding levels are closer to the President's request, which is sufficient to meet known needs. There is no programmatic justification for any increases.

Commission of Fine Arts

The Administration objects to the Senate recommendation of $5.5 million and the House recommendation of $5 million for National Capital Arts and Cultural Affairs. The funds would be used for general operating support on a non-competitive grant basis to Washington, D.C., arts and cultural organizations. This is unnecessary as it is a duplication of existing Federal nationwide competitive grants, providing a special status to already well endowed organizations.

B. Language Provisions

Tribal Contractors' Liability Insurance.—The Senate bill would extend coverage of the Federal Tort Claims Act to tribal contractors or their employees. The precedent of deeming contractors or their employees to be employees of the Federal Government is adverse. Given the wide range of contractual activities of Government agencies, the selection of favored groups of contractors for special treatment is unsound. The Federal Government should not accept direct fiscal responsibility for professional negligence in the absence of an adequate opportunity to control and supervise professional conduct. The Department of Justice advises that if the Senate provision is retained in the final Interior appropriations bill, the Attorney General will recommend a veto of the bill to the President.

The Administration also opposes the rejection of language included in the FY 1990 Budget to postpone until at least FY 1991 implementation of the requirement from a 1988 law that the Departments of the Interior and Health and Human Services (HHS) purchase liability insurance for tribal contractors. Under the Administration's proposal, tribal contractors would continue to be responsible for obtaining their own general liability insurance, as they are now under current regulations.

In addition, despite its rejection of the Administration's proposed language, the House bill would not provide funding to cover the cost of purchasing liability insurance, which primarily affects Interior's Bureau of Indian Affairs and HHS's Indian Health Service. Preliminary estimates are $15 million to $50 million annually in additional Federal costs to cover such insurance. Even with additional funding, it is unlikely that Interior and HHS, with assistance from the Department of Justice, can administratively implement the liability insurance provision in a fair and cost-effective manner by FY 1990.

Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) Oil and Gas Pre-Leasing Moratoria.—The Administration objects to House language that expands a number of existing and new moratoria on leasing. The Senate is commended for deleting most such pre-leasing moratoria.

Buy America.—The Administration supports the Senate's deletion of language that would require structures on the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) to contain at least 50 percent U.S. labor and materials. The House language requiring primarily American-made structures would seriously delay and increase the cost of oil production from the OCS; conflict with the Administration objective of encouraging reliance on indigenous energy sources; run contrary to U.S. obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—inviting retaliation from countries such as the United Kingdom, Norway, the Netherlands, and Denmark; and create a new trade barrier at a time when there is widespread concern about creeping protectionism.

National Forests Meeting Annual Average Allowable Sale Quantity (ASQ).—The Administration objects to Senate language that would increase FY 1991 funding by 10 percent for specified Forest Service resource programs on any individual National Forest if that forest has prepared for sale a volume of timber equal to the annual average ASQ. Also objectionable is language establishing a permanent, indefinite appropriation, available on request, to fund necessary activities to ensure that an annual target of 125 percent of the average annual ASQ is fully prepared for sale by the beginning of each fiscal year.

In both cases, funds would be derived from Federal timber receipts. The Administration opposes this earmarking of Federal timber receipts and the use of inappropriate incentives that distort agency priorities. This provision limits the Secretary of Agriculture's ability to allocate funds and effectively manage National Forest resources.

Plus scorekeeping adjustments:
National forest system			35	28	60	48
Oregon and California grant lands			12	9	12	9
The House and Senate direct that "excess" Federal timber receipts in the Forest Service (FS) and Bureau of Land Management be made available for the bureaus' use. The House caps the FS receipts made available at $35 million. This earmarking of receipts that would otherwise be turned over to the General Fund of the Treasury will increase the deficit by $37 million–$57 million.
SPR Petroleum			120	120	120	120
Bill language directs that receipts from the sale of oil and gas from the Naval Petroleum Reserves in excess of the budget estimate be available to buy SPR oil in fiscal year 1990. This will increase domestic discretionary spending by $120 million.
SPR Petroleum	387	213
Congress does not recognize budget amendments not yet transmitted. This is a budget amendment that was not transmitted at the time CBO prepared its data.
Energy conservation PODRA receipts	43	43
The President's budget assumed that receipts would not be realized in fiscal year 1990. CBO includes an offset for receipts in its scoring of the request.
Fire fighting	269	189	198	139	271	190
The House and Senate score nearly all fire fighting appropriations as mandatory. OMB scores only reimbursements of prior year transfers and unplanned emergency fire fighting and rehabilitation as mandatory.
Land and Water Conservation Fund Rescission	−30
OMB scores the legislative proposal to rescind unused contract authority as discretionary. Both OMB and CBO score the House's and Senate's proposed rescission in the bill.
OCS Moratoria			8	8	8	8
The House and Senate propose one-year moratoria on pre-leasing and lease sales in several areas, as well as bans on exploration for existing leases in two areas. CBO estimates that this would increase the deficit by $2 million in fiscal year 1990. OMB estimates that it would increase the deficit by $10 million in fiscal year 1990. Increases would be substantially greater in future years.
Compact of Free Association	−6	−6	−6	−6	−6	−6
CBO scores as discretionary funding for Palau for which authorizing legislation is required. These funds should be excluded from the discretionary total since they cannot be made available in the absence of legislation implementing the Compact.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Madam Speaker, I have been remiss in not having added to those who contributed mightily to the work on this conference report and to the bill the name of my own good assistant, Mrs. Mary Bain, who has assisted me for 40 years. I think her name should join the names on that honor roll.

Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DEFAZIO].

Mr. DEFAZIO. Madam Speaker, I rise to support the conference report's provisions concerning the old growth forests of the Pacific Northwest. My district has more at stake in this agreement than any other congressional district in the country.

For that reason I've worked for the last 6 months with the other members of the Northwest delegation to arrive at temporary guidelines for our forests while the courts and the Federal land and wildlife agencies grapple with complicated legal and biological issues.

Many Members here signed a letter criticizing the terms of such guidelines as first written by the other body. Those of us involved in the issue on this side asked that final judgment be suspended until the conference committee completed work on final terms.

That work is now done. This agreement is the first statutory protection for old growth forests. It provides enhanced protection for the spotted owl. It preserves the right of citizens to challenge the actions of Federal agencies through administrative appeals and the courts. It lifts for 1 year a shadow from the timber dependent communities of Oregon and Washington which look to the forests for their jobs and their futures. Most importantly, it is a truce to allow Congress, Federal agencies, environmental groups and timber interests time to work on a long-term settlement.

Our delegations take stewardship of the Federal forests seriously. We are committed to protecting the old growth forests of the Pacific Northwest and preserving a sustainable, stable timber and wood products economy for our future generations. This agreement gives us the opportunity to accomplish both goals.

I also want to express my appreciation for the interest and attention of the chairman of the subcommittee and the other members who were involved. It is a fair agreement and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, it is with enthusiasm that I rise in support of the pending conference report to accompany H.R. 2788. This Member wishes to compliment the distinguished members of the committee for completing their work on this measure, and I hope we will be able to send it to the President for signature very soon.

In particular, I wish to offer a special note of appreciation to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. YATES, and the ranking minority member, Mr. REGULA, who have been particularly attentive to the requests of this gentleman, and a thank you for the special assistance of their staff. Thanks to the willingness of the distinguished chairman and ranking member, together with their colleagues on the subcommittee, Nebraskans will gain in at least two significant ways from passage of this bill.

First, I applaud the appropriation of $6 million for the establishment of a National Arbor Day Center in Nebraska City, NE. The proposed center will be located in Nebraska City, a community in southeast Nebraska which has long been recognized nationally and throughout the world for promoting tree planting and conservation. Nebraska City is the home of Jay Sterling Morton, the founder of Arbor Day. It is indeed appropriate that Congress lend its support to the construction of a center that will become a forum for national and global environmental issues.

Second, I enthusiastically applaud and am grateful for the decision by the conferees to include $300,000 for construction planning for the Lewis and Clark National Historic Trail Interpretation Center in Nebraska. This Member is responsible for adding the authorization language to the National Trails System Act (Public Law 98-11) during my service on the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. Our proposal has been prepared consistent with the direction in the National Trails System Act that the Secretary, if possible, enter into an agreement with a State agency to operate the center on a contract basis.

This appropriation will be the second contribution Congress provides toward the establishment of a center to mark and interpret the Lewis and Clark Trail as it passed through Nebraska. In the fiscal year 1988 Interior appropriations bill, Congress appropriated a total of $55,000 for implementing a system of historical markers at Lewis and Clark campsites in Nebraska and to begin initial planning for the center. This small appropriation was spent well by the National Park Service. Historical interpretation signs at key points along the trail should be in place very soon. Initial planning for the center has also occurred.

Thanks to the work of this committee, we are ready to take the next step. The conference committee is recommending a total of $300,000 for construction planning of the Lewis and Clark Interpretation Center in Nebraska. Consistent with our request, it is our hope that the $300,000 in funds appropriated are to be used for site acquisition of the center, and to plan and develop four open-air, sheltered interpretation points on existing publically owned sites along the Nebraska portion of the Lewis and Clark Trail. Remaining funds would be allocated for initial expenditure toward site planning and final, detailed architectural and construction plans for the interpretation center. With those details in mind, I would like to engage in a brief colloquy with the distinguished chairman and ranking member.

Because of a concern on the part of this Member that any NPS recommended site for the center in Nebraska could be lost to other development activities, it is especially important that we are able to move quickly to acquire land for the proposed center.

Is it the understanding of the chairman and the ranking minority member that a portion of the $300,000 can be used for land acquisition for the Lewis and Clark Trail Interpretation Center in Nebraska?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEREUTER. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, the gentleman is correct. It may be used for that purpose.

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, I thank the subcommittee chairman for his response, and I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, the answer is yes, and I echo the assurance of the subcommittee chairman. There is precedence for this. We know that this has been done in the past, and certainly we will support that action of the appropriate agency.

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Speaker, I thank both gentlemen for their reassurance, and I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE].

Mr. PALLONE. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the conference agreement, with particular reference to the provisions related to offshore oil and gas drilling.

I, too, want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], for basically forging this compromise on what is a very delicate issue. The New Jersey delegation on a bipartisan basis unanimously supported a moratorium on offshore oil and gas leases off the coast of New Jersey, which is part of the mid-Atlantic lease sale that was proposed by the Interior Department to take place in this upcoming fiscal year.

As a result of the conference agreement, we now have a situation where the Interior Department will not actually make those sales in the mid-Atlantic region, particularly off the coast of New Jersey, until 1991, and the conference agreement provides us a moratorium for the area out to 50 miles, basically the near-shore area off the coast of New Jersey in the mid-Atlantic States.

Madam Speaker, it also for the first time establishes that the area out to 50 miles in the mid-Atlantic region is somewhat of an environmentally sensitive area because it requires that when the environmental impact statement is made that there be a separate deferral option for that near-shore area, and what we are hoping is that in effect will put pressure on the Interior Department so that that near-shore area is considered an environmentally sensitive area and ultimately will be taken out of the lease sale.

Madam Speaker, this is very important to the State of New Jersey and to all of the mid-Atlantic States because of the problems we have had with our environment, with our near-shore area. As my colleagues know, over the past few summers we have had major problems with beach closings related to medical waste and other ocean dumping problems, and we really feel very strongly that the possible sale of offshore oil and gas leases will only contribute in the long run to further degradation of our environment.

I should also point out, Madam Speaker, that the amount of oil and gas that is potentially out there is very minimal, that the amount of money that the Federal Government will receive as a result of those sales is extremely minimal, and for that reason I support the conference report.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, in this discussion, or in the discussions surrounding the issue of funding for the National Endowment for the Arts, this body participated in a major debate as to whether standards should be set on the National Endowment, for the National Endowment for the Arts, to control and to give them guidelines as to where money should be placed in terms of obscene and indecent art. It has been this Congressman's position all along that money spent for the arts should be left in the pockets of the taxpayers themselves so they can decide for themselves what they should or should not support in terms of the arts. However, if that money is taxed from them, then at the very least standards should be set to protect them from being exploited, so that their money is not being used for things that denigrate their religion, or for things that they consider to be obscene and indecent, and for this purpose I proposed an amendment, as was suggested by Senator HELMS in the Senate, that would establish reasonable standards that no subsidy to the NEA would go to obscene and indecent art, that no subsidy would go to art that denigrates religion, and no subsidy for art would go for art that denigrates one's race, sex, or handicap.

Madam Speaker, I thought these were common sensical standards. My proposal to instruct the conferees with these standards were not permitted to come to a vote, suggesting that those blocking this drug vote fully understood that they were opposing standards which were contrary to the values and desires of their own constituents. And there has been a charge, which I totally resent, that I and others who proposed these standards in some way were misrepresenting this issue to the people, and I would suggest that the only misrepresentation of this issue was the fact that there was not an up or down vote on the specific issue, on the specific standards that I proposed. Thus, the people were able to vote down the standards without having to acually vote on the specific standards.

Madam Speaker, the hard-working people of my district, and I am certain of other districts around America, do not want their hard-earned money taxed away to sponsor obsence art or the denigration of religion. The NEA and institutions it supports should have higher standards than a local porno store, and this is not censorship, another charge that was made during the debate, but an idea of standards of sponsorship. Artists can still do, even if what I propose would have been accepted, whatever they would like to do as long as it was on their own time with their own time. It is only censorship if one is analyzing the world from a totally socialist perspective in that we would have a ministry of culture that would be defining and deciding all art and thus have the means to determine each and every piece of art in the country that is being subsidized by the Government, being no other method of financing that art.

Madam Speaker, freedom of the arts sometimes means freedom from the Government, and freedom from Government control, but once the Government is involved, certain standards necessarily apply.

Later on I will be seeking to join in a colloquy with my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], on Senate amendment 153, and I will ask for certain clarifications on the conference report which will come later on in this debate.

Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] for this time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, it is with no great sense of victory that I stand as a Member of the Pacific Northwest delegation today on the issue of the spotted owl timber compromise that is in this appropriation. Rather it is with a sense of relief that I recommend the passage of this appropriation and the compromise to my colleagues.

My relief comes in the form of an amendment in this appropriation which calls for a cease-fire in the war over the public forests of the Pacific Northwest.

Madam Speaker, the amendment provides a 1-year breathing space for the lumber and plywood mills of Oregon and Washington which depend on national forests and BLM lands for their raw materials; it provides a 1-year reprieve for the towns and communities across Oregon and Washington whose existence depends on those mills. The compromise amendment embodied in this appropriation rescues 11,000 jobs in Oregon and Washington, 11,000 jobs that would be lost were it not for this compromise.

Madam Speaker, the amendment also provides a 1-year framework for the conservation of old-growth resources. This framework enhances interim protection for the spotted owl and puts the Forest Service on notice that it must take steps wherever possible to minimize fragmentation on ecologically significant old-growth forests.

Finally, the amendment gives the Forest Service a 1-year breather to straighten out its own land management policies—which deserve some straightening out—and puts into place environmentally and economically sound forest plans for Oregon and for Washington.

I want to put the Forest Service on notice right now, Madam Speaker, that we expect the Forest Service to complete, to adopt, and to implement new forest plans in the coming year. Thirteen years have passed since the enactment of the National Forest Management Act; 4 years have passed since the deadline for completion of initial forest plans. We sould not have to be here on the floor today to cover this agency's mistakes, but yet we are here.

Madam Speaker, we are here because nothing less than the Northwest economy and the Pacific Northwest environment are at stake. The compromise in this appropriation addresses that mistake, that colossal policy breakdown, that has left us in this dispute between those advocates of the spotted owl and those who are trying to protect the industry, and I include myself in the ranks of both—which is more than I can say for some who I have negotiated this agreement with.

Now, the chairman of my subcommittee has said that I have been "stubborn" in fighting for protecting the timber-based economy of my region. You bet I'm stubborn in protecting those 11,000 jobs, and I am not ashamed of it.

Madam Speaker, I think it is possible to have a timber sales program that can be operated by going forward within an environmentally sound framework. This is not a perfect compromise. There are aspects of it which I resisted but which I accepted because, considered in the whole it strikes the balance that meets the test of reasonableness. Most industry and environmental leaders agree.

Madam Speaker, I am stubborn in pursuit of the well-being of my region, proud to say so, and I take a back seat to no one in saying so, and I urge my colleagues to adopt this conference report.

□ 1420

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH].

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding me this time.

Never in my wildest dreams would I have suspected that I would take the floor in the well today in the House of Representatives to beg for the economic life of my State of Oregon, but here I am. In 29 years of continuous service in elective office in Oregon, the spotted owl looms as the most traumatic issue facing our State. Timber and timber resources is Oregon's No. 1 industry, providing more jobs and a greater contribution to Oregon's economy than any other.

I represent 10 of the 19 forests in region 6, that is Oregon and Washington. Yes; I do have an interest in this issue.

In Oregon alone there are 70 local communities with one or two mills in them totally dependent upon the timber industry. Not only do we survive because of the timber industry, but in Oregon we fund schools and roads and infrastructure to county government that is essential to our State, as well as to yours.

This conference report by arbitrary judgment, and if this Congress concurs, will reduce the harvest level in Oregon and Washington by 15 percent. That means a reduction of employment by 15 percent.

I ask you, what business could survive if you take off 15 percent of its program? Very, very few.

So we are down sizing the timber industry in Washington and Oregon—for what reason? Because a few radical preservationists groups in America say so, that is why. The surrogate spotted owl is not listed as an endangered species, yet by accepting the conference report we are treating the owl as if it were listed as threatened and endangered.

The facts are that the U.S. Forest Service has testified before our committee that it would take 5 years to determine the biology of the question of whether or not the owl should be listed as endangered, and in the meantime this Congress will put thousands of people out of work, ruin Oregon's economy—and based upon what? A notion, not fact, not science, not biology. I say, what a waste.

If you are saving 11,000 jobs, how many are you costing Oregon by the adoption of the timber industry? Thousands of jobs.

Remember this. We in region 6 are operating on only 47 percent of the forests. That means 53 percent of the forests are already set aside, can never be harvested, can never be touched; so we are operating on less than half trying to make a living in the Pacific Northwest.

Is there any old growth left? Of course.

Is there any owl habitat left? Of course.

So there are three issues on which I disagree. One is the question of the harvest level. We have arbitrarily reduced it because of the action of the Congress, not because of the science of the silvaculturalists in the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management.

Second, we have eliminated what we have called judicial installation. We have allowed lawsuits to go forward on every sale, on every one, and only the ONRC, the Oregon Natural Resources Council, in 1987 appealed 144 sales with a 25-cent stamp and a mimeograph machine.

Third, we have determined that the spotted owl is endangered by congressional fiat, not by science and not by fact.

Madam Speaker, this will injure my State and my economy, and I must speak out against it. Later on in this debate I want to discuss the question of 167, which will come forward as a possible unanimous-consent amendment, and I want to debate that further.

Mr. DICKS. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. Madam Speaker, I want to correct one point. I am sure the gentleman for purposes of the RECORD would want to correct this. There is nothing in this bill that says that the owl is either threatened or endangered. It says that the process will go forward, and there is no prejudice to that process, but the Congress today in enacting this amendment is not making a decision on that. It is the Fish and Wildlife Service after they collect all the scientific information that will make that decision under the Endangered Species Act.

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. The gentleman understands there is nothing in this bill that provides that the spotted owl is endangered.

Mr. DICKS. The gentleman would not want to confuse the agency here.

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I reclaim my time, to answer the gentleman's question.

The gentleman knows very well, and I know, that there is nothing in this bill that provides that the spotted owl is endangered, but the action in this bill reflects exactly that the spotted owl is endangered, and every plan coming from the Forest Service and the BLM has the adoption of spotted owl habitat. The spotted owl is declared endangered.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the House consideration of the conference report to H.R. 2788, the fiscal year 1990 appropriations measure for the Department of Interior and related agencies.

Yes, Madam Speaker, I may be stubborn, like my friend, the gentleman from Oregon, but I think we were stubborn in a cause that produced a very favorable compromise and a very favorable result for the country.

I want to commend the chairman and his staff for the cooperation we received on that and on a whole host of items, including the Puyallup Indian land claims settlement.

I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] for his as usual highly professional and constructive approach and for the cooperation we received from him.

I would also like to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ATKINS], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JONTZ], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] for helping us to reach a compromise on a very difficult issue.

My old mentor, Senator Magnuson, used to say that when everybody is a little bit upset with the results, you probably are on the right position on a piece of legislation.

Well, I can guarantee you this compromise is not pleasing everybody, but under the circumstances I think we did the best job that we could.

I want to make it very clear on the record here today that there was no decision in this bill regarding the listing of this spotted owl as either threatened or endangered. I do not want the Fish and Wildlife Service to be misled by the unfortunate remarks of my good friend, the gentleman from Oregon, on this subject.

I think this is something we want to make crystal clear. What we said was that the endangered species process would go forward under the law.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

The gentleman is making an extremely important point. If the remarks of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] are in any way looked at by the agency in its decisions on whether or not to list the spotted owl, I worry that the gentleman's remarks might lead to the listing of the spotted owl.

The special management habitat areas for the spotted owl are driven by the National Forest Management Act, not by the Endangered Species Act, so in this compromise as we have increased those management areas to protect the spotted owl, we are in no way touching the Endangered Species Act process that will determine whether or not the spotted owl is threatened or endangered.

Mr. DICKS. I think what we did in this compromise is also very important. the gentleman is worried about the overall harvest levels. Under the Hatfield-Adams amendment, adopted in the other body, they talked about a harvest level of 8 billion board feet for the Forest Service, and 2 billion board feet for BLM.

Under this compromise, we went down to 7.7 and 1.9, or a total of 9.6, which is significant, and I understand that; but under the circumstances, I think it was the best that we could possibly do. I understand the impact on the gentleman's district. We have areas up in our State where the harvest level on the Olympic Forests, the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie are reduced by over 50 percent, and thousands of our workers have been thrown out of work; but when you are in the political process here, you have to deal with the art of what is possible and practicable.

The Hatfield-Adams amendment simply would not stand up in this Congress, in my judgment, in the House, and that is why we had to go forward with this compromise, and I think we did the best job that we could.

Mr. VENTO. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. Madam Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ATKINS], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], and others, for their work on this particular issue.

The fact is if you reach back into fiscal year 1989 to provide and free up a good amount of timber, it is literally billions of board feet that had been in stalemate, that had been in court, that had been under injunction, so I think that is the important point that is missing here.

□ 1430

Madam Speaker, I would also point out one thing we did do on this legislation that I think is important is preserve the right of judicial review so that people can have a chance to challenge an individual sale if the Forest Service or the BLM has made a mistake in law in terms of preparing that sale. I think preserving that individual right is very, very important, and I am glad that we could make that improvement in this particular legislation.

I say to my friend, the gentleman from Oregon, that I understand his sentiments and concerns, but, please, let us support this compromise and work on a long-term solution.

Mr. YATES. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Madam Speaker, I rise to commend the chairman and the ranking member for two reasons, No. 1, the bill that is presented to us in the conference report is below the target contained in the budget resolution, and I commend them for that and recommend its passage to the Members. The second area that I commend them for is the compromise that they arrived at with regard to the offshore-drilling issue.

All of us know that this is a continuing and contentious issue. What they have done here is provide an opportunity for the President's task force, particularly off of California, to be able to present a recommendation on this issue.

There is no question that this Nation needs energy, but it also needs protection from the oil spills that could contaminate our most sensitive coastlines, and it also demands protection for coastal economies and communities.

The heart of this issue is good stewardship of our natural resources, and I think that when all of the parties can commit themselves to that goal, a solution is not far off.

I think that the conference has taken a step in that direction, and for that reason I commend them.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report to accompany H.R. 2788, the appropriations bill for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for fiscal year 1990.

I also wish to extend my deepest thanks to Chairman YATES, BILL LOWERY, and other members of the House and Senate committees who worked on this measure.

The conference report provides for a 5-month delay, after the release of the report of the President's OCS Task Force, in the publication of any draft EIS for the three pending California OCS lease sales, and ensures that no final EIS can be released for any of these sales during fiscal year 1990. The report thus is consistent with the President's own recognition that proposals for offshore-oil drilling in sensitive areas such as these raise significant issues which must be carefully addressed. The 5-month period between release of the task force report and publication of any DEIS ensures that there will be full public discussion and congressional review of the task force report and any recommendations which it may include, and makes it possible to reflect these considerations in any draft environmental impact statements released after the task force report is finished. This is critical in order to ensure that the task force's findings are given their due and that public confidence in the OCS Program is not further diminished. In addition, the prohibition on the issuance of any final EIS during fiscal year 1990 is critical for lease sale 91, for which the draft EIS has already been released; besides the issues being reviewed by the task force, serious questions have been raised about the adequacy of the DEIS for that sale, and the time provided in the conference report would make it possible to address both the problems in the DEIS and the findings of the President's task force in any final EIS for that sale.

This measure is also important to me and to many of my constituents because it provides protection for areas included in lease sale 119, which were not included in the task force review process, but which are just as sensitive as the areas within the boundaries of lease sales 91 and 95, which were included in that review. Lease sale 119, emcompassing areas between lease sales 91 and 95, includes three current or pending marine sanctuaries, sensitive marine mammal breeding areas and other areas which could be devastated by an oil spill and by other environmental impacts associated with offshore-oil drilling. The conference report helps to ensure that any further work on lease 119 will benefit from the work of the President's task force with respect to lease sale 91 and 95. This makes good sense, both in terms of the environment and in terms of the use of taxpayers' dollars and I commend the conferees for including lease sale 119 in the conference report.

I thank the conferees again for their hard work on this measure and I urge my colleagues to support the conferees report.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, October 3, 1989.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Attached is a fact sheet on the conference report to accompany H.R. 2788, the Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations bill for Fiscal Year 1990. This conference report can be considered on Tuesday, October 3rd or any day thereafter.

I hope this information will be helpful to you.

Sincerely,

LEON E. PANETTA,
Chairman.

[Fact Sheet]

CONFERENCE REPORT TO ACCOMPANY H.R. 2788, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1990 (H. REPT. 101-264)

The conference report to accompany H.R. 2788, the Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990 was filed on Monday, October 2, 1989. This conference report, by unanimous consent, could be considered on Tuesday, October 3 or any day thereafter.

COMPARISON TO THE 302(b) SUBDIVISION

The conference report provides $10,890 million of discretionary budget authority, $10 million less than the appropriations subdivision for this subcommittee. The Budget Act provides a point of order if the target for discretionary budget authority is breached. Since it is not, there is no such point of order against this conference report. The conference report is $2 million less than the subdivision for estimated discretionary outlays. A detailed comparison of the conference report to the spending and credit subdivisions follows:

COMPARISON TO SPENDING ALLOCATION

[In millions of dollars]

	Conference report interior and related agencies appropriations bill		Appropriations committee 302(b) subdivision		Bill over (+)/ under (−) committee 302(b) subdivision
	BA	O	BA	O	BA	O
Discretionary	10,890	10,348	10,900	10,350	−10	−2
Mandatory	951	518	326	326	+625	+192
Total	11,841	10,866	11,226	10,676	+615	+190

BA—New budget authority; O—Estimated outlays.

The $625 million overage in mandatory budget authority is a result of a $300 million reclassification from discretionary to mandatory pursuant to the Bipartisan Agreement list and, for the remainder, a difference between the current estimate of mandatory firefighting costs and the estimate used in the Budget Resolution, which was based on the GRH baseline's mechanical projection of 1989 (pre-supplemental) costs using the GNP deflator.

The direct and guaranteed loan levels in the bill equal the discretionary subdivision for this subcommittee. A detailed comparison follows:

COMPARISON TO CREDIT ALLOCATION

	Conference report interior and related agencies appropriations bill		Appropriations committee 302(b) subdivision		Bill over (+)/ under (−) committee 302(b) subdivision
	DL	LG	DL	LG	DL	LG
Discretionary	13	41	13	41
Mandatory
Total	13	41	13	41

DL—New direct loan obligations; LG—New loan guarantee commitments.

Pursuant to Section 302(b) of the 1974 Budget Act as amended by P.L. 99-177 (Gramm-Rudman-Hollings), the Committees of the House are required to subdivide the spending authority and credit authority allocated to them in the Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1990 (shown in H. Rept. 101-50). The Appropriations Committee reported its 302(b) subdivisions on June 21, 1989 (H. Rept. 101-97). These subdivisions are the official scorekeeping targets for appropriations subcommittees.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mrs. UNSOELD. Madam Speaker, I rise to support enthusiastically the conference committee report, and I rise in strong support of the Northwest timber compromise contained in the Interior appropriations conference report.

Efforts to achieve a compromise have been the subject of great controversy over the last few months, and I would like to commend the members of the conference committee for developing a compromise that is balanced and fair.

Our goal in hammering out a short-term solution to the Northwest timber supply problem is twofold: First, to prevent the immediate loss of key stands of old growth timber important to the viability of the northern spotted owl and other species, and second, to release for harvest sufficient Federal timber to prevent the economic ruin of communities that depend on this timber.

I believe the compromise achieves both of these objectives. But it is merely a stopgap measure.

This short-term compromise gives us approximately 1 year to address the long-term trends and problems which are responsible for the shortage of timber for mills in the Pacific Northwest, and which are affecting the price of lumber, paper, and housing throughout the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, enactment of this short-term solution is vital to the Northwest, but the hardest work lies ahead.

To resolve the long-term timber supply problem in the Northwest, Congress will have to grapple with some very difficult issues. Our task should not be to choose between jobs or the environment, but to allocate our timber resources more wisely.

Toward this end, Congress will have to come to grips with the export of raw logs to countries which discriminate against our finished wood products. In essence, the Northwest has been relegated to the status of a colony—exporting low-value raw materials and importing manufactured products—despite the fact that we have the most efficient mills and best timber in the world. If Washington were a separate nation, it would be the world's second leading exporter of raw logs, just behind Malaysia.

It is time for us to get tougher and smarter in our resource policies and to insist on fair and free trade in wood products.

We can also make better use of our national forests by developing new forestry techniques, championed by Dr. Jerry Franklin, which could provide both a stable flow of harvestable timber and habitat for a broad range of species.

Mr. Speaker, Congress must assign a high priority to these long-term issues if we are to avoid a repeat of the crisis we have experienced over the last year. I am grateful for the determination and cooperation that resulted in the compromise before us today and hope that it will provide a foundation for the tough work ahead.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation. It is an important bill. There are many things that touch on the authorizing work that we in the authorizing committees do with respect to funding, and it is encouraging to note the funds for American Samoa and a host of other programs that have been enacted into law in recent years.

I especially want to commend the chairman, Mr. YATES, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ATKINS], and others, especially the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN], the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO], and the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD], for their work on the Northwest forest policy question and problem.

The fact is the existing laws do not work. We have ended up in a quagmire of court cases and a stalemate that had resulted in severe economic and environmental problems in the Pacific Northwest.

This measure is a reasoned and balanced approach that moves forward to free up and provide some relief in terms of the economy plus a policy path that will be workable for the near future. It is important that the authorizing committee look at this and try, before the expiration of this appropriation bill, to resolve some of these policy questions if we can. We will try and with the good faith and effort and continued help from the various interest we can solve these questions and provide predictability and certainty for the economy and preservation of this important ecosystems.

Madam Speaker, this compromise on old growth is necessary today so that the stalemate in the Pacific Northwest is placed on the path of solution. There is certainly a lot of hard work ahead for all involved. The existing laws, all well intended have resulted in gridlock. We as a Congress must attempt to craft modifications that will prevent this in the future. The Interior appropriations effort is a start—a good outcome under tough circumstances.

Madam Speaker, I voiced my support for the overall Interior appropriation measure that is presented to the House today. It seems that the Congress and the budget limits have constantly been at odds concerning our land management agencies. The decade of the 1980's has witnessed only grudging support for the management of our public land and parks. The Reagan administration in fact was openly hostile and while the new Bush administration claims an environmental mantle it has not begun to offer support or request funding for a myriad of conservation and environmental programs or policy implementation. Thankfully the House appropriation and authorizing committee with the concurrence of our Senate counterparts have met the challenge effectively.

Madam Speaker, when I wrote the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee recommendations for the park and public lands request to the budget and presented it to the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee I focused on a number of key issues. I'm pleased to note that they were addressed in the House-passed measure and have emerged in this final conference committee product. I share with the members and conferees an understanding and common purpose with regards to these issues and hope that we can continue to build upon this record of the past few years for the future. Congress continues in a defensive mode. Surely we long for real administration support for a conservation agenda with funding.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I just wanted to reimpose into this debate the fact that the administration, from what we understand, does not oppose the legislation in its final form and would sign it. Is that correct?

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I think a President who wants to be the environmental President would welcome this bill.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, this is only for the purpose of adding to the list of honorees on the honor roll the name of Kevin Lynch, who is associated with the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], Mike Bogley, who is associated with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] and also Mr. Nich Ashmore, who is associated with the Speaker.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I urge the Members to support the bill. It is a good bill. It addresses a lot of environmental concerns. It represents a lot of give and take.

The Helms amendment was tough, but I think we have strong language that will prevent any future incidents such as Mappletorpe and Serrano.

I have just one note of caution, and that is that we put a moratorium on 84 million acres of offshore drilling, and as I see the increasing level of imports, we are not to 51 percent, and we were at 47 in May. At some point we need to address this issue of energy independence.

But on balance, this bill represents a very substantial effort on the part of everyone to bring to this body a responsible position.

I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. SWIFT. Madam Speaker, serious issues have been raised in recent months about management of the national forests in the Pacific Northwest. Concerns by environmentalists about the survival of the spotted owl and about preservation of old-growth trees have conflicted with concerns about the effect on scores of small communities throughout the area that are substantially or entirely dependent upon the wood products industry for their economic well-being.

I believe that it is possible to manage the forests on a sustained yield basis and to protect important environmental concerns as well. But the issue has become very emotional, controversial, and difficult to compromise on both sides. The members of the Northwest delegation have determined that we must find a short-term solution—a year or so of breathing room—during which a long-term solution that both protects the environment and the jobs can be negotiated.

The members of the Interior Conference Committee have forged a short-term agreement which I believe does give the timber the stability it needs while protecting both the northern spotted owls and the old-growth forests. Congressman DICKS has committed enormous time and energy working with other members of the committee to bring this agreement about. Those of us whose districts are so directly threatened by any unbalanced resolution owe him and all the others who helped forge the compromise a great deal of thanks for working with us to achieve this agreement.

This short-term solution has several parts: It sets a level of harvest which the Forest Service says can be achieved; it allows for judicial review by the Federal courts, allowing temporary injunctions for up to 45 days but does not let them become defacto permanent injunctions; and it protects environmental concerns during that period with language addressing fragmentation so that the most sensitive spotted owl habitat will be protected.

All these provisions expire at the end of fiscal year 1991, reinstating the status quo, unless Congress is able to substitute a long-term solution.

In short, the revision seeks to keep our mills operating and our forest environment protected while we work out an agreement for the long-term management of the forests.

Nobody is entirely satisfied with this proposal for the short term. But there are several important factors to keep in mind.

First, the delegations have developed this as a stopgap measure, not a permanent solution.

Second, it provides an assured supply of timber to keep the small mills in the small communities throughout the Northwest operating.

Third, judicial review is protected.

Fourth, protection is afforded the forests through the fragmentation language.

Those of us from the Northwest, have worked hard to find a way of defusing this difficult issue while we develop a responsible long-term policy. We urge you to help us find that responsible policy by giving us time to search for it. If we don't have that time, we face economic devastation of unparalleled proportions throughout the rural parts of our States. The tragedy would be that the agony this would visit on thousands of families is simply not necessary. This provision gives us a way to deal with the legitimate environmental concerns without that human devastation. It is worthy of passage.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, in southern West Virginia we are working to diversify our economy through the conservation and promotion of some of our most outstanding natural, scenic, recreational, cultural and historic resources.

The legislation before us today, the conference report on the fiscal year 1990 Interior appropriations bill, includes a number of provisions relating to this effort. These funding items, contained in the appropriation for the National Park Service, will enable us to more fully develop the potential of the National Park System units which have been established in southern West Virginia, as well as to engage in some exciting new initiatives in the region.

Over 10 years ago I worked to gain the establishment of the New River Gorge National River in southern West Virginia, and just last year, two other units of the National Park System, the Gauley River National Recreation Area and the Bluestone National Scenic River, as part of the West Virginia National Interest River Conservation Act.

Today, the New River Gorge National River is still in the embryonic stages of development. We have yet to complete the park headquarters, an appropriate visitors center and have acquired only about 55 percent of the land within the river gorge.

For this reason, as visitation continues to rise at the New River, it is essential that adequate resources be provided for the types of infrastructure developments which the public expects from their national parks.

The legislation before us would appropriate $3,325,000 in construction funding, $1,055,000 in planning moneys and necessary operations assistance for the New River Gorge National River. In addition, it would provide $175,000 to the National Park Service to formulate general management plans for the newly established Gauley River National Recreation Area and the Bluestone National Scenic River.

Taken together, the New, Gauley, and Bluestone comprise the largest network of federally protected rivers in the Eastern United States. As we consider the fact that the United States continues to lose some of its most pristine and wild rivers and streams to developments such as dams and hydroelectric powerplants, the fact that in West Virginia these river segments will remain protected is of national significance.

The conference report also includes $125,000 for the New River Parkway Authority. This funding will be used to continue efforts to construct the New River Parkway along a segment of the national river and as such, facilitate visitor access to several of its outstanding features such as Sandstone Falls. In this regard, I would note that construction funding has already been earmarked for the parkway under a provision I sponsored in the last highway bill.

Perhaps one of the most exciting new enterprises we are pursuing in southern West Virgina involves efforts to preserve our unique cultural identity through what I call the "Coal Heritage Initiative." During the last Congress I gained the enactment of legislation authorizing the National Park Service to study and identify sites of cultural and historical significance involving southern West Virginia's coal mining heritage, evaluate the sites and identify a "Coal Heritage Trail" linking these sites together with existing Federal and State park units and recreational lakes.

My goal is to foster the coordinated development and promotion of outstanding natural, scenic, recreational, cultural, and historic resources within southern West Virginia with access by interstate highways and scenic roadways.

Under the conference report, $100,000 will be available to the National Park Service to conduct the study authorized by title VI of Public Law 100-699. Based on this study, as well as the recently completed report entitled, "The Coal Road: A Survey of Southern West Virginia Mining Tourism Potential," conducted by the Marshall University Center for Regional Progress, I would anticipate that we will have completed the necessary groundwork to support Federal legislation designating a coal heritage site or sites as national parks under the National Park System.

While these park-related matters are of great importance, I would also note that there are several essential measures in this legislation relating to our coal-based economy in southern West Virginia. Approved in this appropriation legislation is $150 million to the States under the Abandoned Mine Reclamation Program. West Virginia is one of the highest annual recipients of these funds, which are used to mitigate health, safety, and environmental hazards associated with abandoned coal mine lands. The amount in the bill is $30 million more than the administration's request.

The legislation also makes funding available for a number of Bureau of Mines initiatives. Included are increased funding for the mine, health and safety technology program in areas involving the mitigation of respirable dust, noise, methane, fires, and explosions in underground coal mines. The bill also provides for greater resources to be directed toward land subsidence and acid mine drainage problems which afflict the coalfields.

I would also note that specifically earmarked by the appropriation measure are $2.5 million for the Respirable Dust Center at West Virginia University, which engages in research to reduce the incidence and severity of black lung disease, and $1.5 million for the National Mine Land Reclamation Center at West Virginia University, which seeks new and improved methods to reclaim abandoned coal mine lands.

Mr. Speaker, this is good legislation and I urge its adoption.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concerns about the restrictions placed on the National Endowment for the Arts contained in the Interior appropriations conference report. The increasing political pressure on arts organizations across the country to monitor the work of their membership and to restrict the work they exhibit is a disturbing trend. I believe that we must encourage creative expression, not suppress it.

Outside regulation of the arts is an infringement on every artist's freedom of expression. In a free and open society, artists have been known to take a new approach when dealing with strong, provocative, controversial issues. We do not always agree with the statement made by a particular artist, nonetheless we all benefit from a new perspective.

Our artistic community has long been a source of inspiration and vision. I believe that we must preserve the freedoms American artists have enjoyed for over two centuries. We must work to create a climate in which the arts may flourish so that they may be experienced and enjoyed by the widest possible public. Thank you.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 2788, providing appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for fiscal year 1990.

I commend the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. YATES, and the ranking minority member, Mr. REGULA, as well as the subcommittee's fine staff, for producing this balanced bill.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the chairman for including $300,000 for the Bureau of Land Management to conduct a study for the purpose of determining the feasibility and desirability of designating a National Recreation Area [NRA] within the American River Watershed.

It is essential that the study of the National Recreation Area [NRA] in the American River Watershed be funded in fiscal year 1990 in order for the information to be available to the Sacramento community in the same timeframe as the information generated by two separate studies currently being conducted by the Bureau of Reclamation and the Army Corps of Engineers on options for expanding flood protection to the Sacramento community. The Bureau of Reclamation study will be completed sometime in the summer of 1990 and the Army Corps of Engineers study is expected to be completed in September 1990. The BLM study will be completed by the end of fiscal 1990 as well.

The results of this study are essential for the Sacramento community to make an informed decision about which of the upstream flood control options proposed by the Bureau and the Army Corps of Engineers is most appropriate. The NRA study will generate information that will show the value of the land and other resources that would potentially be either occasionally inundated by a flood control only/dry dam or largely inundated by a multipurpose dam, and I greatly appreciate the subcommittee's support for this provision.

The conference report also includes $2 million for the Fish and Wildlife Service for willing seller land acquisitions for the Sacramento River National Wildlife Refuge. The USFWS has completed the final "environmental assessment" and concluded that there will be no significant impact to the environment from the creation of the wildlife refuge. Therefore, the USFWS is ready to initiate willing seller land acquisitions immediately.

The purpose of this initiative is to preserve riparian habitat for threatened and endangered species, waterfowl and other migratory birds, anadromous fish, and plants. For example, the wetlands associated with the affected stretches of river are host to the endangered bald eagle. The area also has important fishery resources, including chinook salmon, steelhead trout, sturgeon, American shad, and striped bass.

This funding in fiscal 1990 will enable the Fish and Wildlife Service to continue to make progress on the preservation of wetlands and these critically sensitive habitats along the Sacramento River.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, the bill provides $100,000 for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to complete an assessment and provide a recommendation for the establishment of a national wildlife refuge in an area of southwestern Sacramento County, known as Stone Lakes.

The project has been endorsed by Ducks Unlimited, the Nature Conservancy, California Waterfowl Association, Defenders of Wildlife, Waterfowl Habitat Owners Alliance and the National Audubon Society. A consortium of local conservation groups has also formed the Stone Lakes Alliance to support the project.

Clearly, this is a good project that has the full support of the local community, and it will be a good natural resource investment for the Federal Government.

The conference report also provides $7 million to implement the Santini-Burton single family lot acquisition program at Lake Tahoe and $1.4 million for the erosion control program at the lake. We are at a critical time in the efforts to correct the environmental programs at Lake Tahoe, and the continued support of the subcommittee for this program is key to the success of efforts to protect Lake Tahoe from further water quality degradation.

Mr. Speaker, again, I strongly urge my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 381, nays 41, not voting 10, as follows:

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. YATES

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. YATES moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: ": "Provided, That—

A. None of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials which in the judgment of the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be considered obscene, including but not limited to, depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.

B. It is the Sense of the Congress:

(1) That under the present procedures employed for awarding National Endowment for the Arts grants, although the National Endowment for the Arts has had an excellent record over the years, it is possible for projects to be funded without adequate review of the artistic content or value of the work.

(2) That recently works have been funded which are without artistic value but which are criticized as pornographic and shocking by any standards.

(3) That censorship inhibits and stultifies the full expression of art.

(4) That free inquiry and expression is reaffirmed: Therefore, be it

Resolved:

(a) That all artistic works do not have artistic or humanistic excellence and an application can include works that possess both non-excellent and excellent portions.

(b) That the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts has the responsibility to determine whether such an application should be funded.

(c) That the National Endowment for the Arts must find a better method to seek out those works that have artistic excellence and to exclude those works which are without any redeeming literary, scholarly, cultural or artistic value.

(d) That a commission be established to review the National Endowment for the Arts' grant making procedures, including those of its panel system, to determine whether there should be standards for grant making other than "substantial artistic and cultural significance, giving emphasis to American creativity and cultural diversity and the maintenance and encouragement of professional excellence" (20 U.S.C. 954(c)(1)) and if so, then what other standards. The criteria to be considered by the commission shall include but not be limited to possible standards where (a) applying contemporary community standards would find that the work taken as a whole appeals to a prurient interest; (b) the work depicts or describes in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct; and (c) the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious artistic and cultural value.

C. (1) There is hereby established a temporary Independent Commission for the purpose of:

(a) reviewing the National Endowment for the Arts' grant making procedures, including those of its panel system; and

(b) considering whether the standard for publicly funded art should be different than the standard for privately funded art;

(2) The Commission shall be composed of twelve members as follows:

(a) four members appointed by the President;

(b) four members appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in consultation with the minority leader of the House of Representatives;

(c) four members appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the President pro tempore of the Senate in consultation with the minority leader of the Senate;

(d) the chairman shall be designated by vote of the Commission members; and

(e) a quorum for the purposes of conducting meetings shall be seven.

(3) Members of the Commission shall serve without pay. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in Government service are allowed expenses under 5 U.S.C. 5703.

(4) The Commisson may, for the purpose of carrying out its duties, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate.

(5) The Commission shall issue a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate no later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(6) The Commission shall expire on September 30, 1990.

(7) Expenses of the Commission not to exceed $250,000, including administrative support, shall be furnished by the National Endowment for the Arts".

Mr. REGULA (during the reading). Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object to the printing of the motion or to having the motion considered as read.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I believe the gentleman seeks to have time on this motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has pointed out that the gentleman is seeking time.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I would ask to be recognized in opposition to the motion for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inquire is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] opposed to the motion?

Mr. REGULA. No, I am not, Madam Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER], who is opposed to the motion, would be entitled to 20 minutes.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], then, would have 20 minutes, the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] would have 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] would have 20 minutes on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity, and I appreciate the courtesy that has been extended to me today.

The central issue at the heart of this debate which has raged in this body concerning the National Endowment for the Arts has been, does Congress have the right to set standards for the use of tax dollars that are going to the arts? From what has been returned to us from the conference committee, the answer seems to be a resounding yes.

However, the standards in the language are to me anemic and somewhat unclear, and for that reason I would like to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], to better establish the meaning of the language of the conference committee which was arrived at in the conference report.

Madam Speaker, with that explanation, I would like to ask a few questions of the chairman of the subcommittee.

□ 1520

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I would be very glad to respond within my limited knowledge.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I appreciate the willingness of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] concur in the statement in the conference report, quote, "The NEA erred in approving the grants for the exhibiting publicly of certain controversial photographs by Robert Mapplethorpe and by granting a fellowship for Andres Serrano whose subsequent work included a photo of a crucifix submerged in a jar of urine"?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, that reply took place in connection with a very extended discussion that was taking place in the conference. I expressed the opinion that out of 85,000 grants by NEA, only 20 had been controversial over the last 24 years and that in connection with the grants that were made in 1988, out of 4,000 grants that were made, only two were controversial. I said that in my judgment at that time I thought they had done a most credible job, but, if they erred, they erred in respect to these two grants.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

In referring to section A of the proposed amendment, which sets standards for the use of NEA funds, would the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], agree that it was the intent of the conferees to bar the further use of tax funds for artistic projects comparable to the objectionable parts of the Mapplethorpe exhibit, the ones in which he suggested the NEA erred?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] will yield, I do not understand that question. I would ask the gentleman to repeat that.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I will try to rephrase it.

I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] if you do concur that the NEA erred in submitting these grants for Mapplethorpe and Serrano, would you, and this is referring to section A of the proposed amendments which sets standards for NEA funds, would you agree that it was the intent of the conferees to bar the further use of tax funds for artistic projects that are comparable to the objectionable parts of the Mapplethorpe exhibit, meaning the ones that you suggest the NEA erred in, in the first place?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I say to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER], I don't know that you can have comparable grants to the Mapplethorpe and the Serrano. I think they were original artifacts by those two artists.

If you are asking me, is it the intent of the conferees to require that NEA and NEH are to consider among the other factors in connection with grant making, whether the proposed applications are obscene, then the answer to our question is yes.

Madam Speaker, was that the thrust of the question of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER]?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, the basis of the question is that, if indeed the art projects in the future that are comparable, if comparable to the objectionable parts of the Mapplethorpe exhibit, the NEA then uses that as a standard to determine funds on further exhibits on those same grounds.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] will yield, I think perhaps we cannot use as a standard for comparison Mapplethorpe or Serrano. I have never seen other works of art like that, and I do not know of anybody else who has. I do not know that there will ever be other works of art like those, so it seems to me that the question of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] is kind of in a vacuum, and that is why I thought the reply I should make is as to what the conferees did.

Madam Speaker, the conferees agreed that obscenity is to be a factor in grant making in the future and that in the event that an application were judged to be obscene, then there were certain other factors that came into play, just as they did in the case of the Miller education, with which I am sure the gentleman is familiar.

Madam Speaker, my colleagues will remember that there were three qualifications in the Miller decision; one, whether it was prurient; two, whether or not it was antagonistic to what was the standard in the community; and, third, whether or not it possessed literary, scholastic, political, or scientific merit; all of those factors, may I say, plus, the standard which is now in the law that requires artistic excellence and the highest quality of art to be in the applications that are approved. If the applications do not possess "artistic and humanistic excellence," whether they are obscene or not, they ought not be approved. If they are obscene, then it was the conferees' intention to leave within the discretion of the chairmen, the chairperson of NEH and chairperson of NEA, the decision as to whether or not there was enough social merit of the kind that are outlined in those four categories to justify overcoming the possibility of obscenity and approving the grant. Except for that, then the obscenity would take over.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, given what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has just said, and whereas we are having a little trouble with trying to determine whether or not we can possibly have a comparable piece of art in the future come before the NEA, were the same Mapplethorpe exhibit to come before the NEA right now, including the objectionable photographs, would the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], agree that the NEA would now be in violation of the standards we have set and by what the conference report suggests in their gentleman's agreement by funding that exhibit today?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER will yield, I do not know how I can answer any differently that I did.

As far as this gentleman is concerned, there are certain pictures in the 150 photographs that make up the Mapplethorpe exhibit that I would find objectionable. There are roughly 10 of them, I think, that I would find objectionable. I do not know about most people; I suspect most people would designate them as pornographic, obscene, indecent, all the words that are there. However, Madam Speaker, that decision again depends on what the intent is within the discretion of the chairman. If the chairman decides that the merit to the application is overcome by the weight of the obscenity, then he would not approve the grant. He would then have to decide what to do.

Madam Speaker, I cannot say what the chairman would do under those circumstances. I might do it were I the chairman, but I am not the chairman.

As it happens, I am a prude. I tend to not like pictures of that kind.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], I'm having difficulty in understanding the answer then. You're suggesting that——

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] will yield, may I reply to the gentleman that what the gentleman is doing is asking me to give him precise answers to problems and issues that the Supreme Court has had trouble with for generations and for decades. The gentleman from California cannot ask me to talk about a——

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I am asking the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] about the intent of the conference, he being our representative or being a representative on the conference, and I am asking him whether or not, if the Mapplethorpe exhibit, including the many offensive pictures within that exhibit, were resubmitted to the NEA, is it the intent of the conference that that exhibit would be re-funded under the gentleman's agreement that the conference came up with?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] will yield, I will tell the gentleman that the conference did not consider the question. The conference considered the fact that they had been funded. Most of the members of the conference, I felt, believed that they probably should not have been funded, or the Mapplethorpe should have been conditionally funded upon excluding some of the pictures, but on the question as to whether it was the intent of the conference that, had Mapplethorpe been submitted again, I say the intent of the conference was to the contrary because the intent of the conference was to leave that decision within the discretion of the chairman.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. So, Madam Speaker, the intent of the conference was not to set any standard that would prevent a Mapplethorpe exhibit; is that correct? And what the gentleman is suggesting is that the intent of the conference was not to prevent the refinancing and the resubsidization of an exhibit that was exactly the same as the Mapplethorpe exhibit?

Mr. YATES. I am telling the gentleman that it was the intent of the conference to leave that decision within the discretion of the chairman of the NEA and NEH. That is specifically set out in language that we wrote.

Now, if you are asking me would they do it, would the members of the conference do it if they were the chairman of the NEA, I do not know the answer to that, but insofar as the intent of the conference was concerned, as the language indicates, that is left within the discretion of the chairman.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, let me make it clear, it was the intent of the conference, as I view it, and of the managers that we not use taxpayer's dollars to fund obscene art, period.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Is that the chairman's opinion as well?

Mr. YATES. I would say, yes. As a matter of fact, it would be my impression, too, that I would not want to see taxpayers' money funding obscene art that did not have any kind of the conditions that the Supreme Court decision also required, namely, that it did not have meritorious content.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, would the gentleman then say that if a piece of art had meritorious artistic content, that as well as that, dealt with a subject matter which sexually exploited children or denigrated someone's religion, that that should be funded simply because it has some artistic merit, along with the subject matter?

Mr. YATES. The gentleman is twisting my words. What I was doing is citing what the standards adopted by the conference were, and the standards having been adopted by the conference reflected the three conditions that I have just outlined.

The gentleman is trying to get me to say that they did not have all of those conditions. I am telling the gentleman that all those conditions were adopted by the conferees. That is in the language.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. To go on, Madam Speaker, the proposed amendment establishes a commission which would as part of its mission consider whether the standard for publicly funded art should be different than the standard for privately funded art.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman raises a very good question, and that is the subject that we have accorded to the Commission, whether the standards should be different.

For example, I know the gentleman has written a script that he calls the French Doctoress, and the story that appeared in the Los Angeles Times, as the gentleman knows, talked about a steamy love scene between the French Doctoress, and I think it was a Gestapo agent. The Times, I think, quoted the gentleman as saying to the studio, "You can make it as graphic as you want."

Now, I assume the gentleman justifies that on the grounds that there is no funding by the Federal Government.

But the point I am trying to make is that, yes, that is a valid question. Should there be that difference? It is a very profound question that the conference rightly believed should receive the consideration of the wise men and women who will make up the Commission.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. And if the Commission arrives at the answer, yes, there should be a difference in standards between federally funded art and that which is privately funded in terms of the ability of the Government to set standards, is it the intent of the distinguished chairman that this Commission also has the authority to recommend what those different standards should be?

Mr. YATES. Well, I will say to the gentleman that we have given this Commission 180 days to come to its conclusion. When it has concluded, it will report back to the Congress, and at that time the authorization for another few years will be under consideration by the legislative committees of the House and the Senate having jurisdiction over this matter.

I think the gentleman's question should properly be addressed to them, because they will be making that decision.

Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRANDY].

Mr. GRANDY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

I did not intend to get into this, but I am wondering as I listen to this debate whether we are talking about art or whether we are talking about taste.

I heard terms like obscenity and excellence, and even with the Commission established by this amendment and a chairman that can "yea" or "nay" any funding, I am wondering if that will ever satisfy the gentleman, because I am not sure we will ever come in this body, I hope, to a definition of what is good taste and what is bad taste.

Let me give the gentleman an example. Right now there is receiving Federal funds at this time a production which explicitly portrays scenes of transvestism and implies lesbian love, receiving $30,000 of Federal money and playing in this neighborhood. It is at the Folger Shakespeare Library. It is called "Twelfth Night." It is by William Shakespeare.

Now, my concern is that if we try to proscribe and micromanage what this Commission will do, I am afraid that they might refuse to fund something that might be controversial, or at least speculative in a way.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. There is only a limited amount of time.

Mr. GRANDY. I just wanted to get this in. My point is this. I cannot predict what will happen in the next fiscal year, but I would be stunned if Andre Serrano gets a grant from the NEA next year.

The problem with funding art is that you do not know what you are going to get until after the artist has created, and it is very hard to defund the project after it is hanging in the gallery or on the stage or running in the movie house.

The concern that I have is that by attempting to legislate and micromanage, and in a sense palpitate over every paragraph as to what is obscene and excellent and what is not and what is truly homoeroticism and what is only semihomoeroticism, you probably stiffle some creative impulses which are legitimate, which probably even deserve a Federal subsidy to get going, and that is the only reason I take the floor.

I appreciate what the gentleman is doing. I think the gentleman has accomplished his mission.

I think that the possibility of homoerotic art or crucifixes or Stars of David in tubs of urine next year is limited, but I think that if we go too far to try to tell the chairman of this commission what his judgment will be before he makes it, he will not make a judgment and projects will not get funded.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Madam Speaker, I am listening to this fascinating discussion and, of course, there is much truth in what everybody says. I think that if there is any doubt about a work of art that the benefit of the doubt should go to the artist, but some things are beyond the pale. Some things are not dubious at all. The Serrano crucifix in urine to me is beyond the pale.

Subsidizing with Federal money of child pornography is beyond the pale.

Now, there is more at stake here than artistic integrity. We are not qualified to determine the merit of a work of art, I will concede that, but we are accountable to the taxpayers whose money is being spent, and we cannot avoid that. We cannot deny that. We cannot escape from that. So we must weigh the accountability of limited Federal funds with insulting people's finest sensitivities, and those things are egregious and we ought to know when something is egregious and when something is doubtful.

Now, "Twelfth Night," Shakespeare, the Bible, we all know that, but we also know the Serrano Christ and we know what Mapplethorpe has done, and the taxpayers do not want to subsidize that and to just send the money and do not ask questions is not being accountable.

So I do not have a solution to the problem. I would think my friend with a highly developed sensitivity to the world of art and the muses would be able to figure some way to avoid taxpayers having to subsidize egregious obscenity, and that is all I have to say.

Mr. GRANDY. Madam Speaker, if I had known the gentleman from Illinois was going to weigh in on this debate, I probably would not have taken the floor.

Let me first say that I am no artist, and I have 10 years on television to prove it.

I would just say this. The problem with funding art is you are not funding art. You are funding the artist.

□ 1540

If Andres Serrano had come to the NEA and said:

> Here is a beaker of urine, and I am going to put a crucifix in this, could I get some money?

The answer probably would have been, "No." One does not know until the project is created. We have judgment here that is built in place.

As a matter of fact, you have several hoops to jump through. You have, as I understand it, and correct me if I am wrong, the distinguished Chairman, the Chairman of the National Endowment can veto a project, can he not, under the gentleman's amendment?

Madam Speaker, I yield one additional minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRANDY].

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANDY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, he may, indeed. Under the new language, he may consider the application so obscene that it has no merit and, therefore, should be vetoed.

Mr. GRANDY. So, therefore, we have a democratic process followed by an autocratic procedure if we so desire?

Mr. YATES. That is correct.

Mr. GRANDY. In a sense we have the ability, and the gentleman from Missouri just gave me the word, we have an art czar which may be right or wrong, but I think the problem that was created this year with funding of obscene and pornographic and disgusting and sacrilegious works of art is more than corrected in this amendment.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I would just point out to the gentleman from California that we do have accountability, and to the gentleman from Illinois who mentioned accountability, we have more accountability than the Helms amendment. The Helms amendment simply says that you cannot do it and does not say who would make the decision, did not have any penalties, had no way of really enforcing the amendment. We have tried to address that, and the conferees worked long and hard to get language, given the circumstances that we have heard outlined here today, that would provide accountability. Somebody is responsible. Somebody has to answer; namely, the Chairmen of the NEH and NEA. We have today with us in the Chamber the chairman and the ranking member on the Subcommittee of Education and Labor who will be addressing this problem in the reauthorization. I would hope that those who have spoken today who want to try to be more precise will take their suggestions to that committee so that it becomes part of the permanent law.

This is only a 1-year bill, and if we are to address this problem, it should be addressed as part of the permanent law. I would hope that in their hearings in the subcommittee there will be ample opportunity to have testimony from many different people as well as in this commission that has been named.

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, could the gentleman explain how the provisions that the conference committee has drafted would have prevented the taxpayer from having to fund the Mapplethorpe or the Serrano exhibits? How would this language have assured that the taxpayer would not have been given that burden?

Mr. REGULA. I would point out to the gentleman the language that is in the conference report: "None of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials which, in the judgment of the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities, may be considered obscene including, but not limited to, depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children," and so on, and I think that had that language been in the law, Mapplethorpe and Serrano would not have been funded.

Mr. WALKER. So we are assuming, if the gentleman will yield further, that those works would have been regarded by the National Endowment as fitting that definition that they would be obscene as the gentleman from Illinois said beyond the pale, and that, therefore, the Commission under your language would have had the option of just rejecting them outright and never having the funds flow to those particular projects? Is that correct?

Mr. REGULA. The Chairman of the Commission on the Endowments would have had that option, yes. What we are tryng to do is establish accountability, and that was the flaw in the Helms amendment. It had no designated individual accountable. It just said it cannot be done, but usually, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Iowa, this is an after-the-fact situation, so we need this kind of strong language establishing a point of accountability, and that is, I think, the desire of the Members of this body in terms of the use of tax dollars.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield in order that I may reply to the gentleman's first question?

Mr. REGULA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, the gentleman asked how a taxpayer could prevent his money from going for this. I get letters. I received letters from taxpayers all during the Vietnam war saying that they were trying to set their money aside from paying taxes so it would not go for carrying on the war. How does that differ from the question the gentleman is asking? There was no way for them to do it.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, the point is we are the elected representatives of the people, who have to make determinations here about how money is going to be spent. I think the elected representatives of the people here are somewhat concerned that their money is being used for things that even the conference committee has agreed now should not be funded such as obscene art. What I am trying to do is establish here now how the process would work, and I think the gentleman from Ohio has described it pretty well.

Just one final question: Who then are we holding accountable? Is it the Chairman?

Mr. REGULA. The Chairman.

Mr. WALKER. The Chairman of the National Council?

Mr. REGULA. We say the National Endowment. That is the Chairman and the panels that make these judgments. We use an inclusive term, the National Endowment.

Mr. WALKER. So if in the future something would happen that would fall through the cracks here and we would end up with something that many people would regard as being egregious in the mode of Serrano and Mapplethorpe, we then, under this amendment, can hold the Chairman of the National Council of the Arts directly responsible for having funded those projects? Is that right?

Mr. REGULA. That is absolutely correct. Just as we hold General Powell responsible for some of the things that happen at the Pentagon. We do this in every activity of Government. We have Cabinet members who are responsible for what their agencies do. The Government is predicated on a sense of responsibility. Our constituents hold us responsible for how we vote in this body.

Mr. WALKER. The problem for some of us was that when we contacted the National Endowment early on about these exhibits, when I discovered it, for instance, and wrote letters, the letter I got back from the National Endowment basically said, "We have no responsibility for this."

Mr. REGULA. I think that will be different.

Mr. WALKER. That is the point that we got back rather lengthy letters from the Chairman of the Endowment saying that, "We have no responsibility for this." Under the gentleman's approach now, they will have the responsibility? Is that correct?

Mr. REGULA. That is correct.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, let me say that we have gone even further than that. I assume that the gentleman was talking about Serrano when he talked about that he wrote a letter to the Endowment and got a letter back?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. YATES. On the Serrano, the gentleman is absolutely correct, and the Endowment, as it happens, was correct in the sense that its procedures permitted that to be done. It would make a grant to an institution which was authorized to make subgrants. We have stopped that. That institution no longer has the power as a final authority to make those subgrants. It acts as a recommendor, and those recommendations go back to the chairman and to the Council for consideration. So that in the process of reviewing subgrants, they will receive the same consideration and responsibility that direct grants receive.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, in other words, in the future, I am not going to get another letter from the National Endowment for the Arts shrugging their shoulders and saying, "I am sorry, there is nothing we can do about it. That taxpayers' money is gone?"

Mr. YATES. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALKER. At this point we have somebody to hold directly responsible?

Mr. REGULA. Absolutely. I think in many ways that is one of the great strengths of this language is that there is accountability, and that is the essence of our system of government that someone is accountable.

Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I want to commend the committee for their fine work and excellent language they have brought to the body and the conference report on this item, the chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], and the ranking Member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Just for the record, because I think there has been such confusion in the debate, and this is now the third time it has come before the House in this session, but I think somebody may be confused as to who is wearing the white hats and dark hats, as it were.

On the issue of public accountability, I want to just be sure the record makes very clear that when the committee first brought this measure to our attention in the first instance, in the very first instance, they brought to this body language to strengthen accountability of the NEA, recognizing that, yes, there is indeed, a distinction to be made between public censorship, on the one hand, a first amendment violation, as opposed to proper public accountability for use of public funds. That was in the original bill that came to this House. It was stricken on a technical ground that it was regarded as legislating in an appropriation bill which apparently is now agreed upon as proper which is fine.

I supported putting that language in. It was a very distinct minority that called for pulling out the language.

Let us let the RECORD show that first of all, in the very beginning, before we got into these long and laborious disputes, the chairman and the ranking Republican Member brought language addressing the issue satisfactorily to the judgment of a vast majority of Members.

Second, I think the RECORD should show, and the votes will show that those who objected to the language in the first instance did so because they said they did not believe in "censorship" or any restrictions on the arts.

Then they went on to say that what truly motivated them was that they did not believe in any public funding for the arts, but rather than debating the issue of public funding for the arts over and over again on the floor of this House, they mentioned Mapplethorpe and Serrano. That was all they talked about. They said no, we do not believe in censorship; no, we do not believe in making these kinds of distinctions, but we just do not want art.

It then came back in the conference report. The same people who now had previously objected to legislating in an appropriations bill now favor legislating in an appropriations bill, strangely, however, given the language which came back from the Senate, not because they believed in censorship, or not because they believed in the dangers or were concerned about the dangers of intrusion into artistic freedom, but once again because they did not believe in public funding for the arts.

But the record will also show that over and over again all they did was talk about Serrano, Serrano and Mapplethorpe. I have to say if Members look at those who said they are for public accountability, it was those Members who stood by the chairman and the ranking Member. Our votes have consistently been for public accountability within a public policy of support for the arts.

I will take second place to no one in this body in saying that we are not responsible for appropriate uses of public funds. But I do not want the public to have a misconstrued notion as to who is wearing what hat in this debate.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Madam Speaker, I think the American people are going to be able to determine who is wearing the white hat and who is wearing the black hat, if we put it that way. I have to admit, from the very first I admitted to this body, as did several of my colleagues, we would prefer the Government not be in the business of subsidizing the arts in the first place. At a time when we are struggling to come up with funds for prenatal care and health care for the elderly, it is questionable whether or not we should be spending those funds in the arts. I fully admit that.

But to spend those funds and not to be able to set standards to prevent those funds from flowing to obscene and indecent art is in itself an obscenity, and I think that the American people will be able to determine who is wearing the black hats and who is wearing the white hats in reference to they do not want their tax dollars going for art that should be down in the local porno store.

Our institutions of art that are subsidized by the National Endowment for the Arts should have higher standards than the local porno store. The fact is the American people will be able to determine for themselves who is making that stand and whose side they are on.

We are not talking about just simply Serrano and Mapplethorpe, as we have been repeatedly told on the floor. I have seen examples funded by the National Endowment for the Arts that included bestiality, included homo-orgy scenes, and I do not care whether it is hetero-orgy or homo-orgy scenes, the Federal Government should not be subsidizing that kind of art.

We had a situation where the Gay Sunshine Press had pictures of these things as well as the Statue of Liberty turned into a transvestite, equipped with a penis and the rest. This is not the kind of trash that our people expect us to be spending our Federal dollars on. They expect us to set standards so their dollars do not go there.

The fact is that when someone says we do not know what is going to be done until after the money is spent, that is not correct. The Mapplethorpe exhibit, the art that was being subsidized was perfectly known to those people who made that decision.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will give him an extra minute.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I am happy to yield on the gentleman's time.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I just wanted to point out to the gentleman, as I pointed out to the conferees, I looked at the application, and I looked at the transparencies, and the so-called controversial art the gentleman refers to was not in the transparencies. I do not know whether the council knew what the show was going to be.

The practice of NEA, which will be reviewed now by the Commission, was that they wanted to get a consideration of what the artist's work was before they approved it. Now they are going to look at the shows, so that they did not look at the entire show.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. With all due respect, I believe the position of some of the people who have been opposing this has been that even if they did know they could have well gone ahead and financed that with Federal tax dollars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] has expired.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California 1 additional minute.

Mr. ROHRBACHER. Madam Speaker, we have heard that setting some kind of standards is going to be stifling of artistic freedom and development in this country when we are talking about standards for the use of Federal tax dollars. I think the American people, and we all know it, and that is why I had to go through so many problems trying to get this to a vote in the first place, why we were never able to get this to a direct vote, that the American people expect us to set standards, especially at a time of high deficit spending. For us to be spending our dollars, refusing to set standards so that those tax dollars are not wisely used and instead are flowing to such sexually graphic art, and again either heterosexual or homosexual art, I do not care, but to have our dollars flowing in that direction at a time of high deficits is wrong, wrong, wrong. I do not characterize it as wearing black hats or white hats. The American people will decide who is right on this issue. I only hope that the conference has come up with language which will prevent this kind of abuse in the future.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I agree it is wrong, wrong, wrong, to fund any form of obscenity with taxpayers dollars.

What we have done in this conference report is establish a standard, "no funds shall be used," and we list those things, and with the standard we have established accountability. As the chairman said, this was done by a subgrantee. We say no more, no more subgrantees, no more ability to write a letter to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and say, "Well, we did not know." Under this language, the chairman and the council are accountable. I think that is what the gentleman wants. He wants somebody to be responsible if there is an abuse of discretion such as we have experienced with Mapplethorne and Serrano, and we have made a strenuous effort to do that even to the point of taking language out of a Supreme Court decision that established a standard.

I urge all of our colleagues to read the language that is in the conference report. I think if they do that, they will discover that we have addressed this problem in the best possible way to avoid any future abuse such as triggered this discussion originally.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Madam Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], chairman of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, for yielding this time to me.

Let me start out by commending him and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] and all of the conferees for taking what was a horrendous, unconstitutional set of ideas, and making them far less offensive than Mr. HELMS would have imposed upon this Congress and upon the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities and a host of other governmental agencies.

It seems to me that in the 20-some-odd years of the history of the National Endowments they have demonstrated that the gentleman from Illinois and his counterparts in the House and Senate really had the right idea at the very outset in having a peer-review-driven process so that politics and politicians, no matter how well or how badly motivated, would not be the ones determining for this country what was really art and what was offensive art, and what was acceptable art.

I think that the steps that are being taken now, driven by a small frantic minority, tend to take us in exactly the wrong direction. In the history of the Endowments, some 80,000 grants have been given. Less than a dozen of those, less than 0.015 percent, have brought any kind of reaction that they were offensive to anybody in Congress or anyplace else.

It seems to me that that demonstrates such a tremendous degree of success and effectiveness and accountability that we ought not to go down the path of censorship and of undermining the artistic process and the free expression of art and of ideas.

□ 1600

I think that regardless of what the gentleman from California thinks, the people of this country have demonstrated over the years that they support the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities because of what they have done for the arts in regions and localities throughout this entire country; a tremendous burgeoning of the arts has been achieved by the commitment of a very modest Federal contribution.

The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Ohio have reason to be extremely proud of that.

We ought not to let a small misguided minority thwart us and mislead us from that process.

Although the conference language leaves out Senator HELMS' original bans on funding for art that is "indecent" or that "denigrates" a religion, race, ethnic background, age group or handicap, it still includes measures that unnecessarily restrict the NEA's funding decisions.

Before we vote to retain such restrictions, as well as vote to use up $250,000 of the NEA's 1990 appropriations on establishing a commission to review the NEA's grant-making system, we must keep in mind the NEA's track record. Fewer than a dozen of the 80,000 grants given in the history of the NEA have aroused congressional displeasure—that is at most 0.15 percent of all the grants that the NEA has ever made. Before we place unnecessary restrictions on the NEA and waste its precious money, we must pay attention to the bare facts. As the old saying goes, "if it ain't broke, don't fix it."

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KOSTMAYER].

Mr. KOSTMAYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I want to join the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS], in commending the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], and say only very briefly, I wish to separate myself from this chorus.

When we ask artists or art itself, to be accountable even to the taxpayers we diminish the creative impulse of musicians, painters, novelists, playwrights, dancers and so forth. Artists should be accountable, only to themselves and to their work. Artists in America should not be accountable, even to the American people.

When art and artists are accountable to the public will, what do we get? Turn on your television tonight and you will see for yourselves.

Artists are not politicians. While I will support the language because it is an improvement over the language offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], I must say, we have diminished the creative impulse in America today. We have chilled creative expression in America today. We have taken a step backwards in America today. This is a mistake, Madam Speaker. We have issued a political warning, a political threat to our most creative citizens.

When we ask art and artists to be accountable to the public, we appeal to a kind of public common denominator.

Those few pieces of art which have offended the majority here are the exception, not the rule.

If I have time, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I agree, I do not think artists should ever be accountable. It is us who ought to be accountable to the taxpayers. We are spending their money. We have to spend it wisely and prudently, not fritter it away indulging the counterculture impulses of someone who calls himself an artist.

Let Hugh Hefner or Stewart Mott pay for that stuff. Believe me, it is the Emperor's clothes.

Madam Speaker, in front of the Social Security Building in Chicago is a giant four-story baseball bat made of wrought iron. I do not know how much that cost the taxpayers. But I would hate to take the referendum in my district to see whether they thought it was money well spent. We should be accountable, not the artists.

God forbid, an accountable artist; that is oxymoron.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, is the gentleman suggesting we take a referendum in his district to determine what is art. With no disrespect to the people who live in the gentleman's district, I think that is a bad idea.

If you do not believe me, turn on your television tonight and you will see what we produce in this country for public consumption. Art should not be judged by some kind of referendum or at the ballot box or on the floor of the House. That is not the way the creative process has worked.

Mr. HYDE. The people's money should be spent with some measure of accountability. If the gentleman wants to——

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Let us take an occasional chance and we will end up with an occasional bad piece of art. It will happen occasionally; it is inevitable and far more desirable than a wholesale attack on art in America, on what is different or odd or strange or even offensive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Is there any further debate on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES]?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I was just going to ask how much time remains.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has 11½ minutes, the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] has 1 minute remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] has 6½ minutes remaining.

Is there any further debate on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I propose, if it is agreeable to my colleague, I propose to close the debate by reading the full action of the conferees on this subject. It will only take, I think, 1 minute.

Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I need for the purpose of making clear what the conferees did in order to answer the questions of the gentleman from California that he asked me at the start.

This is what the conferees did:

None of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts or for the National Endowment for the Humanities may be used to promote, disseminate or produce materials which in the judgment of the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be considered obscene, including, but not limited to, depictions of sado-masochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.

I do not agree with my friend from Pennsylvania that this has a chilling effect.

What we have done and what the gentleman from Ohio refers to in talking about accountability means that we now have in the Chairmen of both of the Endowments the accountability of deciding, as they do now under the law, which grants should be made.

The artists have no reason to feel any kind of chilling effect. They have a dispute which has taken place here now, but I do not think that has any kind of a chilling effect. Artistic expression, artistic freedom of expression is still covered under this amendment.

Madam Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question on this motion. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

All those in favor of the gentleman's motion will say "aye," those opposed say "no." The gentleman's amendment is hereby agreed to.

The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The CLERK. Senate Amendment No. 164, page——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] on his feet?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Did I not have 1 minute of debate left?

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, the gentleman was on his feet and he knew that the Chair proposed the question. He made no effort to ask for any kind of a rollcall. The Chair listened for him and then judged that the issue had been closed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion for the previous question was not in order unless the gentleman from California yielded back his time.

Mr. YATES. Yes.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Madam Speaker, I am not asking for a rollcall vote, I am not going to ask for a rollcall vote.

Mr. YATES. I misunderstood the gentleman. I thought the gentleman had used up his time. I am sorry if I cut the gentleman off. I did not mean to do that, I have no reason to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California seek to use his final minute?

Mr. YATES. The gentleman has 1 minute left, as I understand it. I thought he had it.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. I am not calling for a rollcall vote. I would just like 1 minute's worth of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 1 minute and the previous action of the House in disposing of the motion is vacated.

Mr. ROHBRABACHER. I thank the Speaker.

Madam Speaker, we have heard a lot of talk today about censorship, about stifling people's artistic creation, even one of my own film clips was mentioned by the distinguished chairmen.

I do not believe in censorship in the private sector. I do not believe we in this body should be censoring movies or artwork or whatever. Anything that we have proposed here from my side has been suggesting that artists can still do whatever they want on their own time and with their own dime, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY] would say.

The fact is that if I sell my screen play to someone in the private sector, they have a right to do with it what they want. And I would not try to have the Government involved with that process.

But when it comes to the Federal tax dollars, we should be responsible to the taxpayers because they do not have any choice whether or not they are going to be paying for that, for whichever piece of art subsidized by the Government. If someone does not like the movie——

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute just to point out to the gentleman that we thought, too, that that was an issue that deserved very serious consideration, and that is why we gave it to the Commission to look at.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. YATES

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion.

Mr. REGULA (during the reading). Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Senate amendment No. 167: Page 85, line 3, insert:

"SEC. 318. (a) From funds appropriated under this Act or otherwise made available—

(1) the Forest Service shall award, notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act of 1984 (16 U.S.C. 618(a)(5)(C)), an aggregate timber sale level of 8 billion board feet of net merchantable timber from the national forests in Oregon and Washington for fiscal years 1989 and 1990. Such timber sales shall be consistent with legally valid land and resource management plans except, in the case of the Mapleton Ranger District of the Siuslaw National Forest, Oregon, shall be consistent with the preferred alternative of the draft land and resource management plan and accompanying draft environmental impact statement dated October 1, 1986: Provided, That of the 8 billion board foot aggregate timber sale level for fiscal years 1989 and 1990, timber sales awarded from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls shall meet an aggregate timber sale level for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 of 6 billion board feet of net merchantable timber; and

(2) the Bureau of Land Management shall award such volumes as are required in fiscal year 1990 to meet an aggregate timber sale level of 2 billion board feet for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 from its administrative districts in Western Oregon.

(b)(1) In accordance with subsection (b)(2) of this section, all timber sales from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls prepared pursuant to this section shall minimize fragmentation of the most potentially significant forest stands. "Potentially significant forest stands" are defined as meeting all the following criteria:

(A) that have at least eight trees per acre exceeding 300 years in age or 40 inches in diameter;

(B) that contain more than four snags per acre greater than 15 feet tall and greater than 24 inches in diameter; and

(C) that contain more than four downed trees per acre which are greater than 24 inches in diameter and are greater than 50 feet long.

(2) To the extent any fragmentation is necessary in order to meet the timber sale levels directed by subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2) of this section, the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management shall confine such fragmentation to the potentially significant forest stands which have been prioritized from the smallest to the largest on a forest-by-forest and district-by-district basis.

(3) The Forest Service is directed to thoroughly review the relationship between the minimal fragmentation criteria of subsections (b)(1) and (b)(2) of this section and the timber sales program for the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie and Olympic National Forests. If these forests are unable to meet their proportional share of the allowable sale quantity under the minimal fragmentation criteria, then the Forest Service shall consult with the advisory boards established under subsection (c) of this section and the United States and Wildlife Service as established under subsection (e) of this section to identify timber sales to meet the proportional allowable sale quantity, and shall prepare, advertise, offer and award these identified sales. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to alter the relationship between the Forest Service and the United States and Wildlife Service under the conferencing process established under section 7(a)(4) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1536(a)(4), as amended).

(c) The Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture shall name advisory boards on a forest-by-forest and district-by-district basis which shall be comprised of not more than thirteen individuals who, in the appropriate Secretary's judgement, equally represent a diversity of views. The advisory boards shall be named not later than November 1, 1989. The advisory board shall assist the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management in reviewing prospective timber sales which shall meet the timber sale levels directed by this section prior to their award. The members of the advisory boards authorized by this section shall serve without compensation or reimbursement of expenses.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, there shall be not more than one level of administrative appeal of any decision by the Forest Service and the Land Management to undertake any activity directed by this section for timber sales to be prepared, advertised, offered, and awarded during fiscal year 1990 from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and public lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. If an administrative stay is granted in any such appeal the Regional Forester or the Bureau of Land Management State Director shall issue a final decision on the merits within forty five days of the date of issuance of such stay.

(e) The United States Fish and Wildlife Service shall confer with the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management, and shall prepare and complete an advisory report which recommends to the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management criteria to be used in identifying those areas that should be avoided to ensure the continued viability of the northern spotted owl. Such report shall be completed and submitted to the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management by November 1, 1989; once the report is completed, the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management shall consider the report recommendations, together with other relevant information, in the preparation, advertisement, offer and award of the timber sales directed by this section.

(f)(1) If parties to the lawsuits referenced in subsection (g)(1) of this section reach and enter into negotiated agreements accepted by the relevant courts not later than October 1, 1989, which allows the preparation, advertisement, offer, and award of at least 1 billion board feet of net merchantable timber from those timber sales enjoined on the national forests, and at least 250 million board feet of timber sales on Bureau of Land Management districts in western Oregon enjoined by the orders identified in subsection (g)(1) of this section, then such timber sales selected shall be prepared, offered, awarded and operated and shall not be subject to further judicial review by any court of the United States.

(2) If the agreements specified in subsection (f)(1) of this section is reached, then those timber sales listed in the court orders referenced in subsection (g)(1) of this section but not identified in the agreement in subsection (f)(1) of this section are hereby voided and shall not be offered for resale in fiscal year 1990.

(g)(1) In accordance with the provisions of subsections (b)(1), (b)(2), (b)(3), and (e) of this section, the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management for fiscal year 1990 shall identify timber sales for preparation, advertisement, offer and award, which may include timber sales from among those described in the court order dated March 24, 1989, as amended, in the captioned case Seattle Audubon Society et al., v. F. Dale Robertson, Civil Number 89-160, consolidated with Washington Contract Loggers Assoc. et al., v. F. Dale Robertson, Civil Number 89-99 (order granting preliminary injunction); the opinion entered on May 18, 1989 in Portland Audubon Society et al., v. Manuel Lujan, Jr., Civil Number 87-1160-FR (order granting injunction pending appeal), and shall consult with the parties of the aforementioned cases in identifying timber sales which were released so that the timber sale levels directed in subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2) of this section can be attained.

(2) After they are established, the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management shall consider the recommendations of the advisory boards established pursuant to subsection (c) of this section regarding any timber sale to be awarded in fiscal year 1990 prior to the award of any subsequent timber sale. These recommendations shall be considered regardless of whether the agreements provided in subsection (f)(1) of this section have been reached, entered into, and accepted by the relevant courts.

(h)(1) If parties to the lawsuits referenced in subsection (g)(1) of this section fail to reach and enter negotiated agreements as provided in subsection (f)(1) of this section, then such timber sales selected pursuant to subsections (g)(1) and (g)(2) of this section shall be prepared, advertised, awarded and operated notwithstanding any provision of law that is a basis for any stay, restraining order or injunction issued in a proceeding identified in subsection (g)(1) of this section.

(2) The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management shall, for each respective timber sale, lift its own stay or apply to the appropriate court for the lifting of the restraining order or injunction whose basis has been withdrawn by this section.

(i) No restraining order, injunction, or void of sale shall be issued by any court of the United States in fiscal year 1990 with respect to any decision to prepare, advertise, offer and award timber sales from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and public lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. The provisions of section 705 of title 5, United States Code shall not apply to any challenge to such a timber sale: Provided, That the courts shall have authority to void a sale if it has been determined by a trial on the merits that such sale should not be awarded.

(j) The Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management, and the United States Fish and Wildlife Service shall submit reports updating their findings and progress as determined by the process established in subsection (e) of this section on a monthly basis to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House for appropriate referral. Such reports shall be submitted as directed beginning on December 1, 1989, and ending on September 30, 1990.

(k) Except for provisions of subsection (a)(1) of this section, other provisions of this section apply solely to the thirteen national forests in Region Six and Bureau of Land Management districts in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to require the Forest Service or Bureau of Land Management to develop similar policies on any other forest or district in Oregon and Washington.

(l) The advisory committees established under this section shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (86 Stat. 770).

(m) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect until September 30, 1990.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. YATES

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. YATES moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 167 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

"SEC. 318. (a) From funds appropriated under this Act or otherwise made available—

(1) The Forest Service shall offer, notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act of 1984 (16 U.S.C. 618(a)(5)(C)), an aggregate timber sale level of seven billion seven hundred million board feet of net merchantable timber from the national forests of Oregon and Washington for fiscal years 1989 and 1990. Such timber sales shall be consistent with existing land and resource management plans or land and resource management plans as approved except, in the case of the Mapleton Ranger District of the Siuslaw National Forest, Oregon, such sales shall be consistent with the preferred alternative of the draft land and resource management plan and accompanying draft environmental impact statement dated October 1, 1986 pending approval of a final land and resource management plan for the Siuslaw National Forest: Provided, That of the seven billion seven hundred million board foot aggregate timber sale level for fiscal years 1989 and 1990, timber sales offered from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls shall meet an aggregate timber sale level for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 of five billion eight hundred million board feet of net merchantable timber: Provided further, That the sales volume shall be distributed in the same proportion between Oregon and Washington national forests known to contain northern spotted owls based on the average sale volumes for fiscal years 1986 through 1988 and;

(2) The Bureau of Land Management shall offer such volumes as are required in fiscal year 1990 to meet an aggregate timber sale level of one billion nine hundred million board feet for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 from its administrative districts in western Oregon.

(b)(1) In accordance with subsection (b)(2) of this section, all timber sales from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls prepared or offered pursuant to this section shall minimize fragmentation of the most ecologically significant old growth forest stands. "Old growth forest stands" are defined as those stands meeting the criteria according to Forest Service Research Publication #PNW-447. In those instances where the Forest Service, after consultation with the advisory boards established pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, determines that the definition in Forest Service Research Publication #PNW-447 is not fully applicable in national forests known to contain northern spotted owls, the Forest Service shall use old-growth definitions contained in its Pacific Northwest Regional Guide.

(2) To the extent that fragmentation of ecologically significant old growth forest stands is necessary to meet the timber sale levels directed by subsection (a)(1) of this section, the Forest Service shall minimize such fragmentation in the ecologically significant old growth forest stands on a national forest-by-national forest basis based on the Forest Service's discretion in determining the ecologically significant stands after considering input from the advisory boards created pursuant to subsection (c) of this section. The habitat of nesting pairs of spotted owls which are not in the Spotted Owl Habitat Areas (SOHAs) described in subsection (b)(3) of this section shall be considered an important factor in the identification of ecologically significant old growth forest stands.

(3) No timber sales offered pursuant to this section from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington known to contain northern spotted owls may occur within SOHAs identified pursuant to the Final Supplement to the Environmental Impact Statement for an Amendment to the Pacific Northwest Regional Guide—Spotted Owl and the accompanying Record of Decision issued by the Forest Service on December 8, 1988 as adjusted by this subsection:

(A) For the Olympic Peninsula Province, which includes the Olympic National Forest, SOHA size is to be 3,200 acres:

(B) For the Washington Cascades Province, which includes the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie, Okanogan, Wenatchee, and Gifford-Pinchot National Forests, SOHA size is to be 2,600 acres:

(C) For the Oregon Cascades Province, which includes the Mt. Hood, Willamette, Rogue River, Deschutes, Winema, and Umpqua National Forests, SOHA size is to be 1,875 acres;

(D) For the Oregon Coast Range Province, which includes the Siuslaw National Forest, SOHA size is to be 2,500 acres; and

(E) For the Klamath Mountain Province, which includes the Siskiyou National Forest, SOHA size is to be 1,250 acres.

(F) All other standards and guidelines contained in the Chief's Record of Decision are adopted.

(4) In planning for the preparation and offer of timber sales authorized in subsection (a)(1) of this section, the Forest Service, to the extent possible in areas proximate to SOHA sites identified in subsection (b)(3) of this section, should exercise discretion in selecting sizes and/or silvicultural prescriptions in order to retain spotted owl habitat characteristics in such areas. The Forest Service should consider the relative location and quality of such areas contiguous to the SOHAs and should give higher priority to preparing and offering sales in areas of lower quality and less important location than to areas of greater quality and more important location relative to the SOHAs.

(5) No timber sales offered pursuant to this section on Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls shall occur within the 110 areas identified in the December 22, 1987 agreement, except sales identified in said agreement, between the Bureau of Land Management and the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife. Not later than thirty days after enactment of this Act, the Bureau of Land Management, after consulting with the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to identify high priority spotted owl area sites, shall select an additional twelve spotted owl habitat areas. No timber sales may be offered in the areas identified pursuant to this subsection during fiscal year 1990.

(6)(A) Without passing on the legal and factual adequacy of the Final Supplement to the Environmental Impact Statement for an Amendment to the Pacific Northwest Regional Guide—Spotted Owl Guidelines and the accompanying Record of Decision issued by the Forest Service on December 8, 1988 or the December 22, 1987 agreement between the Bureau of Land Management and the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife for management of the spotted owl, the Congress hereby determines and directs that management of areas according to subsections (b)(3) and (b)(5) of this section on the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls is adequate consideration for the purpose of meeting the statutory requirements that are the basis for the consolidated cases captioned Seattle Audubon Society et al., v. F. Dale Robertson, Civil No. 89-160 and Washington Contract Loggers Assoc. et al., v. F. Dale Robertson, Civil No. 89-99 (order granting preliminary injunction) and the case Portland Audubon Society et al., v. Manuel Lujan, Jr., Civil No. 87-1160-FR. The guidelines adopted by subsections (b)(3) and (b)(5) of this section shall not be subject to judicial review by any court of the United States.

(B) The Forest Service is directed to review and revise as appropriate the decision adopted in the December, 1988 Record of Decision referenced in subsection (b)(6)(A) of this section and shall consider any new information gathered subsequent to the issuance of the Record of Decision, including the interagency guidelines for conservation of northern spotted owls developed by the Interagency Scientific Committee to address conservation of the northern spotted owl. This review, and any resulting changes to the December, 1988 decision determined to be necessary by the Forest Service are to be completed and in effect not later than September 30, 1990.

(c)(1) The Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall name advisory boards on a national forest-by-national forest and Bureau of Land Management district-by-district basis which shall be comprised of not more than seven individuals who, in the appropriate Secretary's judgment, represent a diversity of views. In the process of selecting individuals to serve on the advisory boards, the Secretaries shall make every effort to recognize the diversity of views and perspectives and allow parties which represent a cross-section of those views to participate in making recommendations in the selection of board members, provided that every effort will be made to ensure the advisory boards are comprised of an equal number of representatives of environmental and business concerns. The advisory boards shall be named not later than thirty days after enactment of this Act. The advisory boards shall provide recommendations to the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management in reviewing prospective timber sales which shall meet the timber sale levels directed by this section prior to their offer. The advisory boards shall present their advice within fifteen or forty-five days after receipts of the necessary review documents. The fifteen-day period applies to single sales and the forty-five-day period applies to multiple sales. The members of the advisory boards authorized by this section shall serve without compensation or reimbursement of expense. The Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management are authorized to use available funds for the services of professional, independent facilitators to assist in the work of the advisory boards.

(2) The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management shall consider the recommendations of the advisory boards once such boards are established pursuant to this section, including any suggested modifications of individual sales. The Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management shall also consider recommendations made by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on those timber sales conferred upon under Section 7(a)(4) or, if the spotted owl is listed as a threatened or endangered species, consult under Section 7(a)(2) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973, as amended (16 U.S.C. 1536(a)(2) and (a)(4) prior to the offer of any subsequent timber sale in fiscal year 1990. These recommendations shall be considered regardless of whether the agreement provided in subsection (f)(1) of this section has been reached, entered into, and accepted by the relevant court. Adoption or rejection of such recommended modifications shall not require preparation of additional environmental documents, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, there shall be not more than one level of administrative appeal of any decision by the Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management to undertake any activity directed by this section for timber sales to be prepared, advertised, offered, and awarded during fiscal year 1990 from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. If an administrative stay is granted in any such appeal the Regional Forester or the Interior Board of Land Appeals shall issue a final decision on the merits within forty-five days of the date of issuance of such stay. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any party seeking to challenge a decision made after the date of enactment of this Act to prepare, advertise, offer, or award a timber sale in fiscal year 1990 from the thirteen national forests and Bureau of Land Management lands in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls need not exhaust their administrative remedies prior to filing suit. Nothing in this subsection shall alter the administrative appeal requirements of the Forest Service or Bureau of Land Management.

(e) Nothing in this section shall affect interagency cooperation among the Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service under Sections 7(a)(2) and 7(a)(4) of the Endangered Species Act and its regulations.

(f)(1) Not later than two days after enactment of this Act, the Forest Service shall submit to plaintiffs in the captioned case Seattle Audubon Society et al., v. F. Dale Robertson, Civil No. 89-160, a list of sales which had been prepared for offer in fiscal year 1989 and which contain at least 40 acres of suitable spotted owl habitat. Not later than fourteen days after receipt of such list, plaintiffs to the suit referenced in this subsection may enter into an agreement with the Forest Service releasing for sale not less than one billion one hundred million board feet of net merchantable timber. Such sales must be available for advertisement not later than fourteen days after the agreement required by this subsection is reached. Such timber sales selected shall not be subject to futher judicial review by any court of the United States.

(2) If the agreement specified in subsection (f)(1) of this section is reached, then those timber sales described in the list submitted to plaintiffs pursuant to subsection (f)(1) of this section but not contained in the agreement authorized by subsection (f)(1) of this section shall not be offered for sale in fiscal year 1990.

(3) If the agreement authorized under subsection (f)(1) of this section is not implemented within the time frames prescribed in subsection (f)(1) of this section, one billion one hundred million board feet of net merchantable timber from such sales submitted to plaintiffs pursuant to subsection (f)(1) of this section shall be selected and modified as appropriate by the Forest Service in accordance with the provisions of this section. Selected sales shall be prepared, advertised, offered, awarded and operated notwithstanding any provision of law that is a basis for any stay, injunction or order issued in the proceeding identified in subsection (f)(1) of this section: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall affect rights available under the Contract Disputes Act (41 U.S.C. 601 et seq.).

(4) The Forest Service shall, for each respective timber sales, lift its own stay or apply to the appropriate court for the lifting of the restraining order or injunction whose basis has been withdrawn by this section.

(5) Timber sales selection pursuant to subsections (f)(1) or (f)(3) of this section shall be based on the following criteria: (1) proportional distribution between Oregon and Washington national forests known to contain northern spotted owls based on the average sale volumes for fiscal years 1986 through 1988; (2) proportional distribution to the extent possible among the thirteen national forests known to contain northern spotted owls in Oregon and Washington based on the average sale volumes for fiscal years 1986 through 1988; and (3) to the extent possible, selection of sales outside the habitat of nesting pairs of spotted owls which are not in the Spotted Owl Habitat Areas described in subsection (b)(3) of this section.

(g)(1) No restraining order or preliminary injunction shall be issued by any court of the United States with respect to any decision to prepare, advertise, offer, award, or operate a timber sale or timber sales in fiscal year 1990 from the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and Bureau of Land Management lands in Western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. The provisions of section 705 of title 5, United States Code shall not apply to any challenge to such a timber sale: Provided, That the courts shall have authority to enjoin permanently, order modification of, or void an individual sale if it has been determined by a trial on the merits that the decision to prepare, advertise, offer, award, or operate such sale was arbitrary, capricious or otherwise not in accordance with law: Provided further, That any challenge to a timber sale must be filed in Federal District Court within fifteen days of the date of initial advertisement of the challenged timber sale: Provided further, That for forty-five days after the date of filing of a challenge to a timber sale the affected agency shall take no action to award a challenged timber sale. Civil actions filed under this section shall be assigned for hearing at the earliest possible date and shall take precedence over all other matters pending on the docket of the court at that time except for criminal cases: Provided further, That the court shall render its final decision relative to any challenge within forty-five days from the date such challenge is brought, unless the court determines that a longer period of time is required to satisfy the requirements of the United States Constitution.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court may set rules governing the procedures of any such proceeding which set page limits on briefs and time limits on filing briefs and motions and other actions which are shorter than the limits specified in the Federal rules of civil or appellate procedure.

(3) In order to reach a decision within forty-five days, the Federal District Court may assign all or part of any such case or cases to one or more Special Masters, for prompt review and recommendations to the court.

(h) The Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service shall submit reports updating their findings and progress as determined by the process recognized under subsection (e) of this section on a monthly basis to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives for appropriate referral. Such reports shall also include information on the extent to which recommendations of the advisory boards established pursuant to subsection (c) of this section were integrated into timber sale decisions as well as reasons for modifying or not adopting recommendations made by the advisory boards. Such reports shall be submitted as directed beginning on December 1, 1989, and ending on September 30, 1990.

(i) Except for provisions of subsection (a)(1) of this section, the provisions of this section apply solely to the thirteen national forests in Oregon and Washington and Bureau of Land Management districts in western Oregon known to contain northern spotted owls. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to require the Forest Service or Bureau of Land Management to develop similar policies on any other forest or district in Oregon or Washington.

(j) The advisory boards established under this section shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (86 Stat. 770).

(k) Timber sales offered to meet the requirements of subsection (a) of this section shall be subject to the terms and conditions of this section for the duration of those sale contracts. All other provisions of this section shall remain in effect until September 30, 1990."

Mr. REGULA (during the reading). Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment. I understand the gentleman from Ohio is in favor of it. I would ask for 20 minutes of the allocated time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] opposed to the motion?

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I am not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] will be recognized for 20 minutes, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH of Oregon moves that the managers on the part of the House recede and concur in Senate amendment numbered 167, relating to the spotted owl.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The debate will be on the original motion as already allocated.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, is it proper at this time to ask that there be a division of the question on that motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may demand a division.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I ask for such a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question will be divided on the preferential motion.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH].

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. I thank the Chair.

Provisions of the conference report before us today remind me of an episode in European history when Neville Chamberlain stood before the British people and declared "It is peace in our time." I am referring to the conference compromise which concerns timber harvesting in the Pacific Northwest.

Today, I will not stand before the American people and the people of the Pacific Northwest and endorse the same principle of appeasement, because beneath this compromise lies the unmistakable signs of continuing conquest. Radical preservationists continue their efforts to lock up forests in the Pacific Northwest, and you can bet your bottom dollar this agreement will not change that fact one bit.

Today, I am offering to substitute the original Hatfield/Adams amendment as passed by the Senate for the compromise provision negotiated with this body in conference. My reasons are simple.

First, the original Hatfield/Adams amendment contained a higher level for timber sales in the Pacific Northwest of 8 billion board feet on Forest Service lands and 2 billion board feet of Bureau of Land Management lands. The conference committee represents a 15 percent reduction in historic harvest levels.

Today the lumber mills in Oregon and Washington are starving for wood. Court injunctions forced by radical preservationists have reduced the timber sale in the Pacific Northwest by billions of board feet. In order to breathe a little life into our communities in the short term, we have attempted to have the Forest Service prepare and sell 8 billion board feet of timber and 2 million on the Bureau of Land Management.

I might point out this is down substantially from the current plans which would allow people to harvest 11.5 billion board feet. The conference committee program is 9.6 billion board feet, a substantial and grievous reduction.

The original amendment included a ban on injunctions to allow our Federal land managers the opportunity to sell the timber that we designate, and to harvest that we allow in the Congress. Obstructionist tactics by preservationists have precipitated a threering circus in the forests, the Congress, and in the courts. The Oregon delegation recognized the necessity to ban injunctions for a period of 1 year, the other body agreed, and the conference committee, at the request of radical preservationists, blew so many holes into that commonsense approach that the judicial provisions in this conference report amount to nothing more than swiss cheese. Well, that won't do.

Moreover, the conference committee has formulated a dangerous array of new and extreme protections for oldgrowth timber. Under this agreement, our land management agencies would be forced to harvest timber as though the spotted owl were already listed as an endangered species. We don't have the evidence to make that decision today.

The Forest Service has said it will take 5 years to gather the evidence necessary to determine whether or not the spotted owl is a threatened species. We in the Oregon delegation—all of us—have said that it would be devastating to our economy if the spotted owl were listed as a threatened species. And today you propose this amendment that sets precedents for managing the public lands that are precisely the kind of management procedures that would be included in a threatened species listing.

This compromise is fraught with confusing, meaningless phrases which not only open the door to the courthouse but roll a red carpet down the front walk. This agreement is not a bar to judicial obstruction, it's the welcoming committee.

For instance, this compromise seeks to protect ecologically significant old growth, but offers no definition as to what is or is not ecologically significant. This is an open invitation to litigation, and it is litigation that threatens the economy of Oregon.

Members can bet the courts will be asked to interpret what Congress meant. Well, what does Congress mean? It is not identified. No one knows.

This compromise directs that judicial challenges must be decided on the merits within 45 days of a filing, unless, it says, if the court finds that the 45-day limit violates due process. With a wink and a nod, this compromise lights the way to challenge its very existence. This compromise presumes to give with one hand, but takes away with the other.

This is a bad deal. And I submit to you that a better alternative can be found. Senator HATFIELD and Senator ADAMS offered it in the other body, and the Pacific Northwest needs it desperately to save thousands of jobs that this compromise will not.

Ladies and gentlemen, the emperor has no clothes. This agreement is not the short-term panacea the conference committee will have you believe, it does not adequately protect people in the Pacific Northwest, it is not peace in our time.

Therefore, I urge Members to support my motion to recede from the House position and to concur in the Senate amendment on amendment 167.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to recede, but I strongly support the work product that was negotiated on the House side with the work of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], and with the work of the members of the Washington delegation.

I must say that I understand the gentleman from Oregon's frustrations.

He represents a large number of the forests that will be affected. However, I must tell the gentleman I read this compromise very differently. First of all, on the question of timber harvest, yes, we did come down from 8 billion board feet to 7.7; and yes, we did reduce from 2 to 1.9 billion board feet beyond lands in western Oregon, and those reductions are painful. We pointed this out to the people on our side who felt very strongly that we needed to reduce the overall harvest level.

However, I must tell the gentleman, I think what we did was reach a compromise here that will give certainty for this next year. The most important and devastating consequences of not reaching an agreement was the prospect of a Federal court decision in Seattle that could have rendered the entire program defunct and enjoined over the next year. What this agreement says is that we can go forward with that program, and yes, we can give the individual a right to go to court for a brief period of time, expedite those proceedings, in order to allow a sale that is not lawful, to be blocked.

But that is something that I think the Members of the House feel very fundamentally about, that we cannot take away the judicial right of appeal of an unlawful timber sale. We created advisory boards, and we worked out a program that I think is fair and equitable in a very controversial matter.

I would just suggest to my friend, the gentleman from Oregon, that I understand how he feels about this national issue. It is becoming a national issue, and I think if we do not work out solid compromises like the one we worked out with the chairman on this issue, then we face the prospect of defeat that could make the situation even worse.

So, Madam Speaker, I urge my colleague, the gentleman from Oregon, to think carefully about this matter before bringing it to a vote here on the floor of the House.

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time at this moment.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN].

Mr. WYDEN. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the committee position.

I do not think there is any question that this is no panacea. In face, all we are talking about is really laying down the swords for a short while. Let me say to my colleague, the gentleman from eastern Oregon, a Member whom I respect very, very much, because no Member is more decent and caring, that I share his view about a lot of the mess we are in. With respect to natural resources, instead of a responsible, balanced approach to making decisions with our forests, we are basically running a lawyers' full employment act. All we do is go to court and sue, and any side that has a temporary advantage is one up in the Federal courts.

I want the gentleman to know that in the next 12 months I think a lot of the committees are going to be prepared to work with him to come up with a long-term solution so that we do not go from year to year, constantly going through this process. I hope that what we will do is take this breather, lay down the swords for a time, and support the compromise.

Mr. YATES. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding time to me.

Madam Speaker, I support the compromise on this appropriation, and I urge my colleagues to stick with the committee's position on the compromise.

I regret that my colleague, the gentleman from eastern Oregon, finds fault with this compromise. I say to my friend that I find fault with this compromise, and I tried to reach him on Friday when it looked like we were coming to a conclusion on this agreement, but the gentleman was not available. He was in a flight to Oregon, so it was not possible to run this past him at this time. I say to the gentleman it is a lot different when you are sitting on the porch and watching the activity in the yard where the action is and where the decisions are having to be made.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] and I have had the task of dealing with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], the chairman of the subcommittee, who is insistent on a point of view that the gentleman from Oregon and I disagree with. The gentleman from Massachusetts also has fundamentally different ideas than the gentleman from Oregon and I about how the forests ought to be managed in the Northwest. These gentleman were at the negotiating table. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] and I had to strike the compromise to find some way to lift a timber sales level that today is at 5 billion board feet and which will represent a catastrophe for the Pacific Northwest up to the 7.7 billion board feet that this compromise provides. Without this compromise we would be at 5 billion board feet. It is not possible to say that we would have been at 8.8 billion board feet, because what we are dealing with is an injunction which has been imposed on our region which leaves us with 5.5 billion board feet. We have 100 Members of this House who were prepared to shoot down and work against the Hatfield-Adams amendment which I supported, as well as the gentleman from Oregon, and which I wish we could pass. But it was not possible to pass that, and I was not going to accept the responsibility, nor was my friend, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS], for the defeat of that amendment, leaving our region with 5 billion board feet in a timber sales program.

It is better to go to 7.7 billion board feet and at the same time put in place some environmental protection for the spotted owl and some environmental protection for old growths of land which should not be fragmented and which the Forest Service says is all possible to do. It is better to get to 7.7 billion board feet on that basis and save 11,000 jobs for our region than to walk on this floor and get mowed down and blown away in a ball of flames and lose the 11,000 jobs and then go home to our people and put out a press release and say, "We were tough, we hung in there, and we sure tried to do a job for you folks, but we are sorry, you lost your jobs."

Madam Speaker, this is a compromise. I have reviewed it with members of the industry and rational and responsible members of the environmental community. These are my constituents as well as those of the gentleman. Industry representatives are saying we should accept the compromise, environmental representatives are saying we should accept the compromise, and the public is saying we should accept the compromise.

My constituents and the gentleman's constituents, the people of Oregon and Washington, have always said it ought to be possible to save the spotted owl and save the industry at the same time. They have always said this. This compromise makes it possible to do both of those things.

I am aware that this is not 8.8 billion board feet. I am sorry that it is not 8.8 billion board feet, and I know the gentleman from Washington, who represents northern Washington and the Olympic National Forest in Washington, wishes it were 8.8 billion board feet. But we are not the only Members on the House floor, and we cannot get 8.8 billion board feet. But 7.7 billion board feet is infinitely better than 5 billion board feet, and that is our choice. That saves 11,000 jobs. I am proud of that compromise. It is certainly not perfect.

In fact, I would say to my friend, the gentleman from Oregon, who criticizes this compromise, that working this compromise through, as I have debated it across the table, has come about with Members from Illinois who have never represented a Douglas fir forest and Members from Massachusetts who have never represented a Douglas fir forest. I have negotiated with people from the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts who have no Douglas fir forest in their districts. I have dealt with Representatives from those regions who had a major input on this thing.

I wish I had the freedom the gentleman has to say that we ought to go to 8.8 billion board feet, but I did not have that freedom. I had to deal with these Representatives who are representing that point of view. What we call that is compromise. We cannot sit on the porch and throw a snowball at those who are making the decisions, those who have saved 11,000 jobs. That is not a surrender; that is a victory. This is a rescue of 11,000 jobs, and I think the people of the Northwest and the people of the United States of America ought to understand it as such.

Madam Speaker, I hope that the Members of the House will stay with the committee's position.

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I feel compelled to stand again and answer my friend, the gentleman from Oregon, who makes the suggestion that somehow I was sitting on the porch while this was all going on.

□ 1630

Madam Speaker, I just want to correct the record. The point is on June 24——

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. No, Madam Speaker, I will not.

Mr. AUCOIN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] was not sitting on the porch. He was on the plane flying back to Oregon.

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Madam Speaker, I want to remind everybody that on June 24 I, along with this fellow, this gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], were working together on a summit recommendation to which we all agreed. Later than that, our delegation, as well as the Washington delegation, agreed with the Hatfield-Adams proposal.

Now we have moved again, and we have gone so far that I have to draw a line in the sand. This is beyond compromise. This is again surrender.

So, Madam Speaker, I am not going to go home and say, "I'm sorry you lost your job. We saved 11,000 jobs, but you lost your job."

I am going to suggest that after this debate there is going to be a huge part, and around the campfire there will be revelry because the people who represent radical environmentalism in this country will have won. There is not one objector. Among those people and Members who represent that part of America there is not one objection to this compromise.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, "Who won?," I ask my colleagues, and this time next year I am going to stand here, and I am going to relate to my colleagues the number of jobs and the number of mills that have closed because of this compromise, and I am going to be here next year, God willing, and I am going to suggest to my colleagues that what they have done with this so-called compromise, because it will not work, and we are out of business——

Mr. DICKS. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for just a second?

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. DICKS. Madam Speaker, I would just point out another thing.

I understand how strongly the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] feels about protecting his consistuency. This gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] feel just as strongly.

Madam Speaker, we looked at this and looked at the situation that we were in. I want to remind the gentleman that 100 Members of this body wrote a letter to the distinguished chairman of this committee suggesting that Hatfield-Adams be stricken from this bill altogether and that is the climate in which we were operating.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] knows, as I do, that we have 13 Members from the State of Washington and the State of Oregon combined, I believe, in the U.S. Congress, so I just want to make sure the gentleman understands that we did the best we could to protect jobs in the Northwest. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], my good friend who serves with me on the Committee on Appropriations fought as tenaciously as anyone I have ever seen to get the best possible deal we could get and still get something that would pass the House of Representatives.

Madam Speaker, I think the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] should be applauding the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], not condemning him. I think it is unfair and a mistake.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] for yielding.

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Of course, and the condemnation is the protest, I say to my friend, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DENNY SMITH], and by the way, I always thought a majority was 218, not 100.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DENNY SMITH].

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Madam Speaker, I have been listening to the colloquy between my colleagues from Washington and Oregon, and I have to agree with my colleague, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH].

Madam Speaker, I voted for the compromise, and I am sure that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] is correct. He did the best he could, and I am sure that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] did the best he could.

However, Madam Speaker, the problem that we have here, and this is my ninth year in serving in this body, we have seen two wilderness bills, we have seen a wild and scenic river bill, we have seen a Columbia River Gorge bill, and we have put so much of our resource behind walls and barriers that cannot be touched and included them in the multiple use designation that we are running out of area that can be utilized to harvest, and the gentleman well knows that that is correct in that we have had more and more difficulty in getting to the base that we need. We have made it much more difficult for these people to do their job in the appropriations process.

Madam Speaker, as I look at the situation from the standpoint of the people I represent and the people that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH] represents and that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] represents, we are seeing destruction of a resource that we are not going to be able to gain back, and that is the people who have been dedicated to their lifestyle and to their communities. Unfortunately the Government controls the raw resource, and we have no way to go. I know that a good job has been done, and I think we appreciate it, but at the same time I think we do have to say that enough is enough in giving more, and I am sure that the gentleman would also agree that we cannot continue to give up the resource base.

Madam Speaker, we need a long-term, sustained yield from these forest lands, and I think that is the one thing that hopefully in the long-term solution that I know we all share hope for that and that we will be able to put it together in the near future.

Mr. REGULA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, just a brief comment, and that is that I think this whole bill illustrates what is going to be a continuing problem for this Congress, and that is the conflict between environment and jobs, the conflict between the environment and having the products that have given us the quality of life, the standard of living that we have come to expect.

People in Ohio use the timber that is harvested off of these lands to build their homes, and that is true in all 50 States. The same thing was true here in terms of the moratoria on the drilling. Again the inevitable conflict between the environmental desires and the desire of people for a high standard of living exists. I think we, as a body, will have to address this in more than just an ad hoc basis.

Here we have a 1-year bill that we are dealing with, and yet these issues should be long-term policies that we can establish as a standard that will follow, and so I think the gentleman from Oregon makes a point here that from his constituency's point of view that there are a lot of jobs at stake. It is unfortunate that we cannot have it both ways.

I know that the conferees labored long and hard to try to strike a balance between the two, and we will have that as an almost continuing issue in the years to come, not only in this bill, but in a lot of other bills that are before us.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time. Mr. Yates. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DEFAZIO].

Mr. DEFAZIO. Madam Speaker, I rise again to speak on this issue. We have spent much time on this issue in the last 7 months. It is vital to our State and our region, from both sides and from both perspectives.

Madam Speaker, I just want to set the record clear. We do not have a partisan division here. We have some honest differences of opinion.

The two Senators, the senior and junior Senators from Oregon, are both supporting this compromise. I support this compromise. I believe that we have fulfilled the tenets of what we set out to do at the meeting in Salem in June, and that is two things: protect the owl and large and tag blocks of old growth from fragmentation in the short term; and, second, to get a certain supply of timber, an adequate supply of timber, out there for our timber-dependent communities.

Madam Speaker, this amendment meets those concerns. There are a lot of details we can argue over, but, for God's sake, let us move forward. We have got a long-term problem in front of us, and let us adopt this compromise amendment.

Mr. YATES. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time and I move the previous question on the preferential motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHROEDER). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has requested that we divide, the question on the first part of the preferential motion.

The question is, Will the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 167 with an amendment?

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 167 with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House concur in the amendment of the Senate numbered 167 with an amendment?

The House concurred in the amendment of the Senate numbered 167 with an amendment.

□ 1640

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the last amendment in disagreement.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990, with Mr. MAVROULES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Thursday, September 28, 1989, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], had been disposed of.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 5 printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. OXLEY

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OXLEY: Page 707, beginning on line 3, strike out all of subsection (b) of section 4702 through page 709, line 24, and redesignate the succeeding subsection accordingly.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] will be recognized for 15 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(By unanimous consent, Mr. PANETTA was allowed to speak out of order.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, this is really for the information of the Members on the legislative program on the reconciliation bill.

My understanding is that we are going to take up the Fairness amendment and dispose of that, and then tomorrow we will take up the catastrophic amendments, the Donnelly amendment, the Stark amendment, and my amendment.

Then on Thursday, my understanding is that we will take up the child care amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] will be recognized for 15 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer an amendment to remove the fairness doctrine language from the budget reconciliation bill. Regardless of whether you support reconciliation or whether you support the fairness doctrine, this I think all of us will have to agree is a nongermane provision in the budget reconciliation package.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, the fairness doctrine is clearly veto bait. We have been through this before. President Reagan has threatened to veto it on two different occasions. On two different occasions the House and the Senate blinked and backed off.

I cannot help but believe that the reason this particular nongermane provision is in this bill, in a reconciliation package, is because of the fact that it cannot stand alone because everyone knows that President Bush would veto it, as President Reagan has threatened to do in the past.

I do not think we can afford to have reconciliation in the package, particularly with the good work we have done so far on reconciliation, in a veto mode.

We all recognize the importance of passing a meaningful reconciliation package. This excess baggage is simply that, excess baggage.

All of us should also understand that there is a bill pending in the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and I would ask that the sponsors of the particular bill be inclined to simply bring it to the floor of the House and let it be voted up or down without the subterfuge of adding it to reconciliation.

The fairness doctrine, for the first time in my memory and certainly the memory of anybody else around here, actually contains for the first time civil fines. It provides civil fines by the FCC that would be imposed upon broadcasters who allegedly violate the fairness doctrine.

The FCC in the past has not seen fit to impose any type of fine for any alleged violation. This would mean, of course, that the already over-taxed resources of the FCC would be further put to the test and it would cost at least $100,000 annually to try to bring this about.

My guess is, and I think it is a pretty good guess, that this provision was put in to try to make it germane to the process of reconciliation, with the thought that that particular provision on civil fines would be taken out in conference.

Now, if I miss my guess, the gentleman from Massachusetts, I am sure, will set me straight on that, but I think I am pretty correct on that.

The fines clearly are what, to the sponsors at least, make this bill germane.

But the first amendment argument, I think, is clearly the strongest, and that is whether we want to subject broadcasters who have grown in number now some 400 percent since 1949, we now have over 10,000 radio and television stations throughout this country, whether we want to subject those broadcasters and restrict their first amendment rights by the Government.

What this amounts to is simply Government intrusion on free speech and Government micromanagement of the news.

You must understand that although the broadcasters are covered, nobody else is. The newspapers are not covered. The cable networks are not covered. Nobody is covered except the broadcasters, and it seems to me very unfair in this so-called fairness doctrine.

The doctrine, to my conservative friends, is no help either. I do not think any of us on the conservative side would be concerned about the fairness doctrine being put back in. It is not going to help our cause anyway. Broadcasters are not going to be any more or less conservative in their outlook. They still like, at least in the national media, to follow advocacy journalism. No, I do not think policing broadcasters and interferring with free speech is the answer to this problem.

So do not be deceived, my conservative friends, by the fact that the fairness doctrine was supposedly to bring better coverage. We have been without the fairness doctrine for 2½ years. The world has not come to an end. In fact, there are people who would say that it is working, the system is working much better today than it did before.

□ 1650

To my liberal friends, I would say protect the first amendment. Think about the first amendment. That is exactly what your philosophy should be, and that first amendment should apply to broadcasters as well as to the print media.

The doctrine is out of date. It was meant to serve a different purpose, and that was scarcity of signals. My friend from Iowa, I am sure, will be talking about that later. The fact is that times have changed, and we do have a lot more in the way of increase in the spectrum, and in today's technology the limitation of the broadcast spectrum really is a moot point and a distant vestige of the past.

We hope this chilling effect that clearly could involve the broadcasters will be taken care of with the passage of my amendment. Free speech should be, and will be, I think, the first concern of the Members of Congress.

There will always be broadcasters who will abuse the privilege just as the print journalists do from time to time, but the first amendment is not to be used to protect us against the evils of a free press. It is meant to protect our right of free speech.

The Supreme Court noted in 1973:

> The authors of the Bill of Rights accepted the reality that these risks were evils for which there was no acceptable remedy other than a spirit of moderation and a sense of responsibility and civility on the part of those who exercise the guaranteed freedoms of expression.

And all of us, I think, have to agree that broadcasters as well as the print media for the most part do follow those very simple rules.

Justice Potter Stewart, a great Ohio Justice on the Supreme Court, has said the Founding Fathers "believed that fairness was far too fragile to be left for a government bureauracy to accomplish. History has many times confirmed the wisdom of their choice."

Do not be fooled by the title, Members. Do not be fooled by the fact that the fairness doctrine is really fair. It is quite the contrary. It is not fair. It is Government intrusion into the marketplace. It is Government intrusion of the first amendment in its worst form.

I ask that the Members support my amendment to rid this extraneous part of the reconciliation package. We did a good job last week in clearing out a lot of the dead wood in the reconciliation package, but this is the biggest stick of all, and I would ask that this be removed while we remove the rest of them.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by noting that there has been no indication on the part of the White House that they intend on vetoing the reconciliation bill if the fairness doctrine is included. There has been no statement to that effect which has been made in any form that has come to the public attention and, therefore, I think that that particular issue is a red herring.

With regard to the appropriateness of the fairness doctrine being included in this particular piece of legislation, we have an interesting situation where the dial-a-porn legislation is also in the reconciliation bill. We hear no objection that we are dealing with it through this procedure, because the difference is not there over the procedure but over the substance, and this is a debate over the substance not over the procedure, because if there was a difference over procedure, the dial-a-porn amendment would also have an attempt here this afternoon to remove that from this particular bill.

It is a bill which has passed historically by very large margins in the House. It is one which has a broad base of public support across this country, and it is one that just ensures that broadcasters cover important issues to a community and that they do so in a fair and balanced manner. That is all it requires. It is something we believe deserves the broad support of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT].

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, this is getting to be like "99 Bottles of Beer on the Wall." Some may like the melody, but the lyric is not very imaginative.

We have not said anything new on this issue in this entire debate that has gone on now for a number of years. We all get up and mouth the same arguments over and over again.

The basic point is that the fairness doctrine was in place, was the law of this land for decades, and none of the horror stories that the opponents of the fairness doctrine will tell you will occur if it is restored occurred when it was in place. It worked. It served a useful purpose. It did so without transgressing the rights of broadcasters, and it was repealed as a part of some kind of an ideological mantra as a part of a former and erstwhile and not lamented Federal Communications Commission that is no longer whinnying with us.

It should be put back because it worked. It should be put back because it was good public policy. It should be put back because it achieved good things, and none of the bad things that are attributed to it occurred in practice over a series of decades. It should not be kept away from the public simply because some Commissioner who is already quickly fading from memory had a problem with it.

I would hope that we would not have to sing "99 Bottles of Beer on the Wall" again in this institution. Let us simply vote to reinstate the fairness doctrine and make it work the way it worked before.

Mr. MARKEY, Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY].

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my unqualified support for the legislation before us today, which would codify the fairness doctrine, and my opposition to the amendment to strike.

The fairness doctrine is essential to the preservation of the first amendment rights of all Americans. Codifying the fairness doctrine does not impose new and radical obligations on broadcasters. The fairness doctrine simply enforces their commitment not to impose a single viewpoint on the American public by requiring them to air conflicting views on issues of public importance.

The fairness doctrine has enabled nonmedia groups to challenge the power of the media and to force it to be responsive to community wishes. Some groups of concerned citizens have found the fairness doctrine an indispensable tool in their fight against pornography. Joyce Tuomy, president of Morality in Media of Massachusetts wrote, "If it were not for the fairness doctrine, we would be helpless against pornographic peddlers for a profit."

We will hear some argue that the fairness doctrine is unconstitutional and that broadcasters ought to be treated like newspapers. The Supreme Court rejected this argument in its 1969 Red Lion case when it ruled that the fairness doctrine vindicates the paramount first amendment right of viewers and listeners to a diversity of opinion on issues of public importance.

During our subcommittee hearings in the 100th Congress on this legislation, we had the privilege of hearing Phyllis Schlafly reply to the contention that the fairness doctrine violates the first amendment. She noted:

> It is unacceptable that the first amendment right to speak on radio and television should be limited only to those who have the money to buy a station.

She added:

> In the printed media, we have other alternatives. When no newspaper would print my views on the equal rights amendment, I could publish the Schlafly report at a modest expense and circulate it and sell it myself. On the radio and television, there is no way I could speak a word unless some manager indulges me and sells me the time which he exercises like a royal prerogative. When I complained to FCC Chairman [Mark] Fowler about this, his answer to me was "Phyllis, go buy a radio station." In a democracy that is not a satisfactory answer.

Mr. Chairman, I do not consider that to be a satisfactory answer either. Broadcasters are given the right to the exclusive use of a scarce public resource. As such they have a responsibility to use that spectrum in a manner consistent with the public interest. I urge my colleagues to strike a blow for the first amendment by rejecting this amendment and supporting fairness.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, one of the things that I have puzzled about in my mind is to answer the question that I asked the proponents of this motion to strike the fairness doctrine in this bill: How do we achieve an ability to respond to a contrary point of view without it?

In the debates that I have participated in on this issue in the Committee on Energy and Commerce and on the floor of the House, my good friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE], to be honest with you, I have never heard a rational argument of how we get a recalcitrant radio station to give an opportunity for another point of view without this doctrine.

To leave to the tender mercies of those who manage a radio station by placing on their tender conscience whether or not they will respond in time to give the other point of view is a test of one's credulity as to the nature of human nature itself.

But the point I want to get across is what is the harm of having this in our law? What is the harm of having a law which says that if the owners of a radio station want to give us a bias on a particular point of view that the people on the other side have an opportunity of having their views heard?

I do not understand what is wrong with that.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, the first thing wrong with it, I would say to the gentleman from California, is that it places the Government in the position of determining what is fair. The Founding Fathers determined that the price of freedom might be unfairness occasionally.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, how dare this Congress even contemplate a law which would fine broadcasters whose news coverage the Government does not like.

That is indeed what the so-called fairness doctrine in this bill would do.

Until its proper repeal 2 years ago, the fairness doctrine required broadcasters to air opposing views on issues of public importance. Proponents of the fairness doctrine said the airwaves were so scarce that we couldn't trust our broadcasters to be fair.

Who could be against laws requiring something called fairness?

What sounded so noble, though, had nothing in common with fairness. Broadcasters who feared Federal litigation under the fairness doctrine for unbalanced news coverage avoided issues of public importance entirely. These public trustees were afraid to exercise their free speech. Surely that does not serve the public trust.

And with 10,000 broadcasters and almost 1,700 daily newspapers nationwide, no one can credibly argue that the airwaves are scarce.

Perhaps a long time ago, when there were just a few stations which dominated communities or whole regions, there may have been a reason for such a doctrine. But, that time is clearly long past.

Nevertheless, here it comes again—this dinosaur from the lagoon—sandwiched into a 1,975-page budget reconciliation bill. And for the first time ever, this version of the fairness doctrine directs Big Brother Government to prosecute broadcasters who stray from the official line and levy fines on them, to the point of closing them down.

That, my friends, is censorship. Is that what you really want?

I hope not. For the integrity of the Bill of Rights, I hope not.

I encourage all my colleagues to support Mr. OXLEY's amendment striking the fairness doctrine from budget reconciliation. Without the Oxley amendment, budget reconciliation will surely, and hopefully, draw the President's veto.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS], chairman of the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to strongly oppose this amendment that would delete the provisions of the bill that reinstates the fairness doctrine for broadcasters because it seems to me that if there is anything more fundamental in a nation that prizes the first amendment and the right to free speech, it is to make sure that there is some basic fairness involved in this great media that we have that is controlled by the FCC. Nothing to me could be more important, especially for those of us in public office, than to make sure that we have every opportunity to have a full discussion of all public and political subject matter.

So I stand here slightly puzzled by those who would resist recodifying this very important provision. I think it is basic to our way of life. I think there is almost a constitutional question involved here.

I am very pleased to note that even members of the broadcast industry themselves are supporting the inclusion of the fairness doctrine in our law. I think that the time has come for all of us to stand together, conservatives and liberals, Republicans and Democrats, to make certain that the fairness doctrine be given the importance that it deserves. I think it has proven itself, and it is a worthy part of our American tradition.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from the State of Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time the House has seen this issue. Twice before, by overwhelming margins, this matter has been dealt with, as my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY], and as my colleagues, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY] and others have suggested to the House it should be. We recodified the fairness doctrine then as we should.

I say this with great affection and respect for my two friends, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY]. On this issue they are, regretfully, dead wrong.

It is not JOHN DINGELL alone who urges Members to put this into law and to codify this doctrine. The House has twice codified this doctrine by an enormous vote. The House has overruled the objections of the administration and the House has rejected the supplications of the Federal Communications Commission, which is accountable to this body.

The fairness doctrine is a very simple doctrine. It says that a broadcaster must address controversial issues. It says that when a broadcaster puts controversial views on the air, that broadcaster has a duty to put the other side of the same subject on the air. That is all. It sees to it that the monopoly which goes with the right of a broadcaster to have exclusive right to function on a single wavelength is at least shared by making more broadly available the opportunity for Americans to use the public airways, which are a treasure belonging to all Americans. Broadcast frequencies are assigned to be and to function in the public interest by a broadcaster.

Let us look at who it is that supports the codification of the fairness doctrine. The ADA and the National Conservative Political Action Committee. General Motors, the UAW, and the AFL–CIO. The Eagle Forum headed by Phyllis Schlafly, and Public Citizens headed by Ralph Nader. The American Jewish Congress, the American Jewish Committee, and ADL, and the National Association of Arab Americans.

Church groups support the view that this should be codified. Let us look. The Disciples of Christ, the United Church of Christ, the U.S. Catholic Conference. In a letter signed by the Catholic Cardinal and Archbishop of Chicago, Cardinal Bernardin, strongly endorsed what I am suggesting to the House today, and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America. There are a number of other churches and church groups that time does not permit me to mention.

But what we are asking here is to put into law for good; for once and for all, a doctrine which has seen to it that broadcasters function in the public interest. It is only fair that when broadcasters own that wonderful right to use the money machine which they are given by the FCC, that they should use it in the public interest.

That is what is at stake here. I would urge my colleagues to know that a threat of a veto here does not exist; it does not exist. This legislation is not going to be vetoed over this issue.

One of the interesting things that I would observe, one of the interesting things about this debate, is that there are two provisions in H.R. 3299 which deal with telecommunications issues. One is the question of dial-a-porn. In that we deal upon that important constitutional issue and we make possible the assurance that the telephone network is going to be kept clean through this legislation.

There is no attack on that from my friends who say, "Well, we ought not legislate in this particular piece of legislation." But they do, however, take a different posture where the subject of fairness is involved.

My advice is, let us give the administration, and let us give the broadcasters, and let us give the country a package which involves not only fairness, but also decency.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Oxley amendment to strike the fairness doctrine from budget reconciliation. The fairness doctrine is an unworkable anachronism, just like the arguments that have been cited in its defense in "Dear Colleague" letters I've received.

One letter in favor of codifying "fairness" cited an FCC report from 1949. Another cited a court opinion from 1969. In 1949, there were 2,600 radio stations and 51 television stations. Today, we have more then 10,000 radio stations, more than 13,000 television stations, and even 7,300 cable systems. There are now more stations then you can shake a remote control at.

In addition, we now have satellite dishes, VCR's and home computers with on line access to major news and information services. The free marketplace of ideas, promoting all sides of public debate, has never been more extensive. The unfettered access to the public media has never been greater.

If one were truly to make a consistent case, we would be arguing to extend the fairness doctrine to local newspapers. Very few cities have competition between even two newspaper operations, and yet almost every city, town, and hamlet has vast choices over the broadcast media.

The fairness doctrine serves to restrict rather than promote free and open debate. Broadcasters should not live in fear of fines from Big Brother for unacceptable programming.

It is ironic in the extreme that a great deal of floor debate has occured in this Chamber and the other Chamber over Government censorship of free artistic expression. This is the same debate. How much Government interference in expression is acceptable? The fairness doctrine clearly steps over the line of acceptability.

Let us remember what the Wall Street Journal said about the fairness doctrine over 2 years ago:

> Support for the fairness doctrine is support for a government's deciding what the public should be watching or hearing.

Last week, the Washington Post also chimed in on the right side of this issue. They said:

> A genuinely free flow of ideas is one without the U.S. Government stepping in as director of public programming everywhere.

Mr. Chairman, let us defeat this effort to shove this Orwellian concept of fairness down the throat of the media and the American public. Let's defeat the so-called fairness doctrine by supporting the Oxley amendment.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] has any other speakers with the exception of himself, we would be prepared to close debate on our side at this time.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be defeated. The fairness doctrine passed the House of Representatives by a 2-to-1 margin last year. It is a fundamental precept that both sides of controversial issues should be heard as part of the public discussion over the airwaves of this country.

That is all the fairness doctrine in fact calls for. It has been on the books now for some 40 years with the exception of the last couple when by an arbitrary decision by a very conservative and very rightwing Federal Communications Commission they stripped it off the books.

Now time and again Congress has attempted to reinstate it. This is just the last in a long series of debates.

Most recently we saw in the Committee on Energy and Commerce, an overwhelming 33-8 vote, a bipartisan vote, that this legislation once again be sent out here to the floor of Congress. This is a debate not over procedure, it is a debate over substance.

If those who object to the fairness doctrine being debated upon at this time object, then we should hear the very same objections on the dial-a-porn legislation which we have also inserted into this legislation. It is not a debate over whether or not the President is going to veto this legislation. We have heard no such concern come from the White House.

The only debate here is on whether or not those voices we otherwise shut out have to be heard on the broadcast airwaves of this country.

It has been the principle in this country since the initiation of the radio and television era that that be the case.

Vote "no" on the Oxley amendment. It will in fact result in those voices from Phyllis Schlafly to Ralph Nader, from all parts of the political spectrum that might happen to be unpopular at any particular point in time of being excluded, from having their voices heard. If is fundamentally un-American, fundamentally contradictory toward what the fairness doctrine stands for.

As a result, a "no" vote on the Oxley amendment is what is called for.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS].

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Oxley amendment.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, to wrap up on our side, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, suppose with me for just a moment that we heard on the news today that a Third World country had decided to grant freedom of speech to its citizens but we heard then that Third World country's government had decided that it would judge whether or not the materials that were broadcast over the airwaves were fair and if they were not, the government would say it would fine broadcasters $10,000 per day for not providing adequate news coverage or fair news coverage.

We of course would chuckle because we would recognize that that was not freedom of the press or freedom of speech in that Third World country.

Yet today we here in the United States, under the guise of free speech, are suggesting that the Government should be the one that determines what is and what is not fair when it was broadcast over our radio or television outlets.

Those who have been advocates of this amendment or of this proposal say, "Well, first of all, we had it on the books for a long time." I would observe we have not had it on the books for the last 2 years. It seems to me they should explain to us why they want to reregulate the broadcast industry.

They say to us, "Well, it is not really a procedural problem, we have talked about this before." But the reason they bring it up as part of the reconciliation is because they know it will not withstand a Presidential veto if it stands on its own.

Moreover, we have not voted on this before. Never before have we looked at a fairness doctrine which allows the FCC to impose civil fines on broadcasters. What is the issue all about?

It is about substance. It is about the first amendment.

The Founding Fathers said that free speech was critical in the democratic system of government and, yes, some of that speech would be incorrect; yes, some of it would be unfair; but free speech, the exchange of ideas, the robust exchange of ideas was critical to a free society.

We should not attempt to restrict it here.

The notion of scarcity is a notion that is a dinosaur; it is gone. There is no scarcity in our broadcast outlets today.

Moreover, because of advances in technology, we have great unfairness in the way this doctrine is administered.

Why should NBC News be subject to the fairness doctrine while CNN is not? It does not make good sense. But because people are politically angry that an FCC did this without the permission of the almighty Committee on Energy and Commerce, they keep fighting the battle over and over and over again.

□ 1720

Ladies and gentleman, I understand that some feel that the FCC stepped out of line. I understand that some believe that government has the role to impose fairness. However, I appeal to the majority of Members to ask: One, is it justified to reregulate the broadcast industry after the last 2 years? Two, do you really think that the Federal Government is the one that should determine what is and what is not fair? Three, do you believe it is a wise policy to have the Federal Government in a position where it can impose fines on broadcasters if they do not broadcast the news the way the Government thinks they ought to? I think it is bad policy. I hope Members will vote for the Oxley amendment.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, today we have an opportunity to uphold the first amendment of the airwaves, the fairness doctrine. Provisions codifying the doctrine have been included in the budget reconciliation bill. The fairness doctrine guarantees that differing points of view will have access to the public airwaves and prevents broadcasters from operating in a manner that is inconsistent with the public interest.

We, in the United States, take great pride in our pluralistic society. We believe in decisionmaking through public discourse and a free flow of ideas. The fairness doctrine protects public discourse by requiring private radio licensees using public airwaves to broadcast a wide spectrum of political viewpoints. I believe this is consistent with the public interest.

For over 40 years, the fairness doctrine has provided a public interest standard in broadcasting. It has enjoyed wide bipartisan support in this body. This bipartisan support is evidence that the doctrine has been effective in protecting broadcasting rights for individuals and groups across the political spectrum.

The fairness doctrine is good policy. I urge my colleagues to vote against the motion to strike it from the budget reconciliation bill.

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to again voice my strong support for reinstatement of the fairness doctrine. After extensive subcommittee hearings, the Committee on Energy and Commerce included codification of the fairness doctrine as a part of its budget reconciliation package. However, an amendment has been offered that would strike this language from the bill. I cannot state firmly enough how much I oppose this amendment.

You would think that we were trying to tell broadcasters they had to cover certain events or air specific programs. We are not. All we are saying is that they must provide a reasonable, although not necessarily equal opportunity for opposing views to be heard on controversial issues. The fairness doctrine, in its simplicity, says, "A broadcast licensee shall afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance." Until its repeal in August 1987, it had been a mainstay of broadcast policy for over 50 years; its origins dating back to before the Communications Act of 1934.

Under the 1934 act, the FCC was to ensure that broadcasters serve the public interest, convenience and necessity. In 1934, the Commission determined that a licensee must make his facilities available for the community on various issues which arise. In 1959, Congress gave statutory approval to the fairness doctrine through amendments to the 1934 act.

In a 1985 FCC report, the Commission found that the doctrine had a chilling effect on the first amendment rights of broadcasters and that it no longer served the public interest because the public had enough access to sources of information to ensure a diversity of viewpoints. The FCC felt that recent technological breakthroughs, such as VCR's, cable, videodisks, et cetera, have increased the number of sources of information and that the scarcity of access to information rationale, which underlies the doctrine, no longer applies. How does having a VCR translate into having issues of controversy aired on a broadcast station? These services exist, but reach a far smaller audience than broadcast stations. They do not provide a meaningful alternative to stations for the dissemination of news and public affairs. The very essence of news and informational programming is that it is timely; what is the point of a newscast on a video cassette that you rent from a dealer a day, a week, or a month after the fact?

The public is the loser in a world of telecommunications without the fairness doctrine. We lose because we can count on a lack of attention to issues of controversy or minority opinions by broadcasters. We lose because the fairness doctrine also prevents one-sided reporting of the news. If not for the doctrine, broadcasters might not be willing to report news or air views contrary to interests of a parent or sister company, an advertiser or the station itself. The public loses because this is the first step in burying the public interest obligation of broadcasters.

Finally, allowing the fairness doctrine to remain unrevived will bear especially hard on the minority community. First, stations will not be required to air the views of minorities or positions that may not be obvious to the majority. Second, community affairs departments at radio and TV stations have traditionally employed the greatest numbers of minorities. With the weakening of public interest standards, we have lost jobs and the ability to hold stations accountable to a standard of fairness.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the amendment to strike the fairness doctrine from the budget reconciliation package.

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Chairman, for more than 50 years, the fairness doctrine has been a cornerstone of our Nation's broadcasting policies. The FCC developed this doctrine in response to its statutory mandate that broadcasters must serve the public interest, convenience and necessity.

Simply stated, the doctrine requires broadcasters to afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

Broadcasters are granted the ability to use a scarce public resource, the broadcast spectrum.

I disagree with opponents of the fairness doctrine who have argued that recent technological breakthroughs, such as cable, backyard satellite dishes, VCR's, videodiscs, and other technologies, have greatly increased the number of sources of information and programming outlets available.

While new video and audio services have been proposed and introduced, many have not succeeded and even those that are operating reach a far smaller audience than do broadcast stations. Broadcast news is still clearly the dominant source of news and information for a substantial majority of the American people.

Furthermore, even when and where new video and audio services are available, they do not necessarily provide meaningful alternatives to broadcast stations for the dissemination of news and public affairs.

In addition, I do not believe that the fairness doctrine is an abridgment of the freedom of the press.

If codification of the doctrine is appealed in the courts, I anticipate that this position will be upheld.

The doctrine is a legitimate time, place, and manner restriction upon the first amendment, as the Supreme Court held in 1969 in the Red Lion case.

In that decision, the Court stated that broadcasters are public trustees of the broadcast frequency, and, as such, they owe a duty to the public to present balanced coverage of important issues.

The Court further stated that it is the first amendment rights of viewers and listeners to receive information on vital issues that are paramount.

I am concerned that if the fairness doctrine is removed, some broadcasters might not be willing to report news or air views contrary to the interests of a parent or sister company, an employee, an advertiser, or the station itself.

Mr. Chairman, affirming the repeal of the fairness doctrine would give broadcasters a "bully pulpit" which they could use to express particular points of view, to the exclusion of differing opinions on the same controversial issues.

The competitive markeplace can lead to a direct incentive to avoid unpopular or controversial speech. I do not believe that we should allow broadcast licensees, who are entrusted with control of a public forum, the opportunity to provide incomplete, biased information concerning the major controversial public issues of the day. I urge my colleagues to join with me in opposing the Oxley amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 162, no 261, not voting 9, as follows:

□ 1742

Mr. MARTINEZ, Mrs. LOWEY of New York, and Mr. CONTE changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. FAWELL, MOORHEAD, and PAYNE of Virginia changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. GEPHARDT] having assumed the chair, Mr. MAVROULES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990, had come to no resolution thereon.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 3026, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3026) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objections to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. GREEN

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GREEN moves that the managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H.R. 3026, be instructed to agree to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] is recognized for 30 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, all across the country our cities and communities are faced with the problems and violence resulting from illegal drugs, and nowhere is that problem more acute than right here in our Nation's Capital, the District of Columbia, and we have seen this community swept by gunfire on the part of drug dealers, and we have seen the devastating harm inflicted upon users, including infants who are victims through no fault of their own, but simply because they happen to have mothers who are addicted to crack cocaine.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking the House to instruct the conferees on the District appropriations bill to accept Senate amendment No. 3 which provides a very specific program to deal with this problem. Senate amendment No. 3 appropriates $31.7 million and targets those funds to four specific areas in the District's war on drugs.

First, Mr. Speaker, $23 million will be used to hire 700 new police officers to increase police visibility and to close open-air drug markets; second, $4.8 million and an additional eight judges will be provided to the court system so that the drug offenders can be tried and punished as swiftly as possible after arrest; third, $1.3 million will go to the public schools to expand after-school programs in high-risk neighborhoods and give young people an alternative to drug activities on the street; and finally, $2 million is earmarked for programs to provide treatment on demand to addicts who are pregnant and who, without treatment, will more than likely give birth to crack-addicted babies, which in and of itself is a formidable problem.

Mr. Speaker, since we were here last year, the drug crisis, both in our Nation's Capital and all across America, has worsened. It is important that the House conferees accede to Senate amendment No. 3 that provides $31.7 million for these very specific programs to reclaim the city streets from drug traffickers and provide drug education programs in our schools and drug treatment services for those who need help here in the Nation's Capital.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] may seek to defeat the previous question in order to amend my motion to instruct. I would urge the Members to support me and to vote for the previous question, first because I think it is important that we send an unequivocal message that this Congress and this House wants to see a real war on drugs in the District of Columbia. It is proposed to put up the money to make it work, and if my instruction is diluted to an amendment which many Members cannot support, we will not be sending that message that we so terribly need to send.

The second reason that I ask my colleagues to vote for the previous question is that the Senate amendment that I understand the gentleman from California wishes to instruct us to recede to is in fact a piece of legislation on an appropriation bill. It is specifically an amendment to the District of Columbia Code. Unlike a similar amendment last year that the other body passed which was strictly using the appropriation process to require the city council to do something, this Senate amendment specifically legislates on an appropriation bill and adds a new section to the District of Columbia Code.

I want to say to my House colleagues that if we are going to encourage Members of the Senate to legislate on appropriation bills when we are not allowed to do that under our rules, we are giving our colleagues in the other body a terrible advantage in dealing with us, not just on the District appropriation bill, not just with respect to our authorizing committee. If we are going to go through this practice of trying to ram through Senate amendments which would never be permissible here as amendments to an appropration bill because of our rule against legislating on an appropriation bill, we are simply giving the other body a tremendous whip hand over us in the legislative process.

I do not understand why our colleagues who are so critical when our Appropriations Committee in this body seeks to legislate on appropriation bills welcome this with open arms, when the other body does the same thing.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to support me on the previous question. Vote yes on the previous question, and then vote yes on my motion to instruct.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, this is a well-directed $32 million. As my colleague, the gentleman from New York points out, it provides for 700 police officers, 8 additional judges, $1,300,000 for drug education programs in the public schools, and $2 million for treatment on demand for addicts who are pregnant. There can be no money better spent in this bill than this $32 million.

I would ask for an aye vote on the previous question and an aye vote on the motion to instruct.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. I rise in support of the motion offered by the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. GREEN], a member of the Appropriations Committee. This motion will instruct our House conferees on H.R. 3026, the District of Columbia Appropriations Act, to accept language assisting law enforcement officials in the District of Columbia to combat our war against illicit narcotics.

Mr. Speaker, adoption of this motion is desperately needed to end the scourge of drug trafficking and drug abuse which currently pervades our Capital. This national disgrace is not due to a lack of effort by our hard-working District of Columbia police force; rather, it is due to the historic lack of resources which have been made available to the District of Columbia's legal system for waging the war against narcotics. Unfortunately, the District of Columbia is unique among our Nation's cities in not being able to rely upon additional resources provided through the State government.

Accordingly, this motion will express the strong feeling of the House that it is the responsibility of Congress to provide the necessary funding for additional police officers, additional court cost, additional prisons, additional drug treatment and preventative educational programs. It is essential that we provide adequate resources to alleviate the arising tide of drug use and drug abuse in our Nation's Capital City, Washington, DC.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the gentleman's motion, vote for the previous question and to instruct conferees to support Senate amendment No. 3.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from New York, for yielding me this time.

This issue involves very simply the issue of religious freedom in America. For over 7 years a dispute has been going on with the great university in the District of Columbia, Georgetown University, as to whether or not the tenets of that religious body that supports Georgetown, the Catholic Church in America, will be able to be implemented as they administer the affairs of that university. For 7 years that great Georgetown University has been in a protracted court battle prosecuted by groups that seek to have the university recognize homosexual student groups on the campus by chartering.

Georgetown University fought this every step of the way because it is a tenet, a moral belief of the Judeo-Christian ethic in this country, that that would not be a direction Georgetown University chose to go.

Recently Georgetown in effect wanted to have the District of Columbia finance some tax free bonds in order to build some new facilities on the Georgetown campus. The economic reality of needing that money to build the buildings caused the trustees of Georgetown University to revisit the issue whether or not they would continue in this struggle to maintain tenets of their religion; so the opponents of what I argue today can say, "Well, Georgetown didn't ask you to put up this amendment today." They probably did not, but we are here because it is the right thing to do. The issue is religious freedom in America.

I commend the motion to instruct that my colleague, the gentleman from New York, has offered to the House, because I support the merits of it totally. All I seek to do is to amend the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] with my language, so that the motion to instruct that the House would vote on would contain the meritorious elements of the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], along with mine.

So in light of that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to instruct now pending be amended to include the language that is contained in my motion to instruct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUGHES). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised by the objection.

I will ask my colleague directly, if this Member from California was not here this evening seeking to file this motion to instruct, would the gentleman by making this motion to instruct this evening?

□ 1800

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I guess it would depend upon whether other Members had other ideas also. I think you are asking me something I could not predict.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. The possibility exists that what this Member from California is experiencing is the application of the rules of the House which say that when two or more Members seek a motion to instruct conferees, the one most senior is recognized first, and in this instance, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GREEN] is senior to this Member from California, so when I stood up to be recognized, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] was recognized, so this Member is not recognized for the purpose of offering this motion.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to be corrected by the Chair, but I believe that it was because I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and it is the Committee on Appropriations that has the floor on going to conference on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman. he is senior to me, and he appropriately pointed out that when two or more seek recognition, the senior one is recognized.

What this issue involves is that last year this issue was visited again, and the House voted in that instance by a total of 201 to 134 to sustain the position that I am advocating we adopt today. Last year Senator ARMSTRONG in the Senate got a provision in the bill, the District of Columbia appropriations bill, that in effect said the District of Columbia had to change this basic ordinance so as to make clear that the antidiscrimination provision protecting homosexuals in the District of Columbia would exclude applicability to religious institutions. That is what ARMSTRONG's amendment achieved last year, and the House voted to do that.

The District of Columbia took an appeal from that direction that we put into the law last year, and the circuit court of appeals ruled within the last 2 weeks that the provision which Congress placed into the law, now get this, was an unconstitutional denial of the right of free speech of the members of the District of Columbia because it compelled them to vote a certain way.

What we did last year to correct this error in religious freedom in America was held to be unconstitutional. It denied the right of free speech of the members of the District of Columbia.

This year, to reach the same result, Senator ARMSTRONG has, by an amendment adopted in the Senate, stated clearly that we are amending the generic law of the District of Columbia by saying this provision will not continue in the District of Columbia law, namely, that the element does not require the District of Columbia city council members to change the law. It changes the basic law itself. If we do not do it this way, there is no other way we can do it. That is what this drill is all about.

So I asked unanimous consent to amend my motion. I am not going to do it again. They can sit down and relax. I am not going to do it again. I am just saying it was opposed, so the only way this Member from California will have an opportunity of offering this motion to instruct conferees that we confirm what Senator ARMSTRONG did in the Senate bill is to defeat the previous question.

Let us not kid ourselves, this effort I am undertaking is broadly supported across the Judeo-Christian community of this country. I am going to read a list of organizations that are supporting the effort that I seek to do this evening: The National Association of Evangelicals, Public Affairs Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention, Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, Christian College Coalition, the Association of Christian Schools International, American Association of Christian Schools, the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, Christian Legal Society, Presbyterian Lay Committee, the National Committee of Catholic Laymen, the Forum for Scriptural Christianity within the United Methodist Church known as the Good News Movement, Center for Catholic Policy, and Christian Legal Defense and Educational Foundation, Inc. All of those organizations are supporting the motion that I seek to have adopted by the House this evening.

To get to the point where I can offer this motion, I have to defeat the previous question, and I will at the appropriate time ask that such be done.

Let me just close by saying that one of the most central issues that our society will face in the decade of the 1990's is whether or not we are going to change the culture of our society so that we will accept and equate homosexuality on a par with the heterosexual lifestyle. That issue is now being debated on the floor of the House of Representatives right now. It is wrapped in this whole issue of religious freedom, because Georgetown University says in the tenets of its religious beliefs that it does not choose to equate the two lifestyles.

I happen to believe, as a matter of conviction, that whether one favors or opposes homosexuality versus heterosexuality, that to appeal on the basis of religious freedom should transcend any other considerations which we bring to this issue, because if the Congress of the United States or the District of Columbia, an agency of government in this country, can violate the religious tenets of one of the religious groups of this country, who is next? What religious doctrine will be next that will be violated?

I conclude by asking my colleagues that if we are to give life to religious liberty and religious freedom in this country, the motion that should be adopted is to defeat the previous question, and I ask for the Members' support.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if my colleagues will not start yelling "vote, vote," I will take 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the request of the gentleman from California to defeat the previous question. I think everybody ought to know what this amendment deals with.

The Armstrong amendment now directly amends the District Code to prohibit the city government from coercing religious institutions into administrative acts intolerable to religious tenets. What in the world is wrong with that? I submit to my colleagues that nothing is wrong with that.

I want to ask the Members one question, and I would like to have everybody's attention for 1 minute: How far do we go down that slippery road of homosexual rights? Do we go so far as to destroy religious freedom in this country? I think not. There should be limits.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I know the Members are anxious for a vote, so I will be very, very brief.

Let me indicate to the Members that the issue before the House at the present time is the motion by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] to instruct the conferees. No other issue is before the House.

Collaterally, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] has raised a straw issue. It is a nonissue. He has mentioned Georgetown University. Georgetown University entered into a consent decree last year. They sent me a letter saying they had not urged any Member of the other body or any Member of this House to come forward with a motion to instruct to agree to the Armstrong amendment.

Second, the highest court in this jurisdiction has said that the Armstong amendment is unconstitutional, and that the Congress could not do last year by instruction what the Armstrong amendment is attempting to do this year by actually amending the District of Columbia Human Rights Act.

Mr. Speaker, none of the parties to the consent decree is unhappy with the agreement. Georgetown University does not want the amendment that the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] wants to instruct the conferees to accept.

Mr. Speaker, the City Council and the executive branch do not want it, and I do not believe this House wants it, because the same issue was discussed last year, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

□ 1810

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Many of us read about the intolerable infant mortality rate in the District of Columbia in last Saturday's papers. Babies are now dying at a rate that is triple the national average. City health officials attribute this number to the use of crack cocaine by pregnant women. A portion of the additional funds allocated in the appropriations bill for the District of Columbia is to initiate a program for women addicts who are pregnant to provide a drug treatment program. This is wise use of scarce funds.

In addition to this crucial reason for increased funding for Washington, DC, I support the law enforcement and prevention provisions that are included in the Senate bill. Last spring, I was pleased when William Bennett, the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, decided to focus on Washington, DC, in addressing the drug crisis, and I joined with my colleagues from the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia in offering Mr. Bennett regional resources and asking that there be a regional approach to the solution. These additional funds give substance to the fight against drugs in Washington and in neighboring jurisdictions. The District of Columbia needs the additional 700 police officers that will be hired, the increased court assistance to handle the drug arrests, and more prison space. The public schools need the funds to increase after-school activities for at-risk students.

Without these funds, some residents of the District of Columbia will have little hope of improving their situation. Clearly, we need a steady will and additional funds to combat the use of illegal drugs in the Washington metropolitan area. I urge my colleagues to support the Green motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the gentleman's motion.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the only way that Members can have a clean vote to support my motion, to agree to the Senate proposal to set up this drug program and fund it is to support me and vote yes on the previous question and vote yes on my motion.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. Of course, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear, so we all understand, I do not seek to replace the gentleman's motion to instruct, I seek to amend it so that his language remains there, and I would have the chance to put my language in as well, is that correct?

Mr. GREEN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. But the problem is if he does amend my motion, then many Members would not want to vote for my motion, and I do not think we will get the very clear statement of where we stand on drug policy that I would like to see this House make today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to instruct.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUGHES). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 193, nays 222, not voting 17, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Stokes for, with Mr. Cox against.

Mr. OWENS of Utah and Mr. HUGHES changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the previous question was not ordered.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUGHES). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I understand now that the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] intends to offer an amendment to the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

My question is: Under the offering will I receive part of the time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] that 1 hour would be allotted to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER]. He would have to yield time to the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, if I understand, it all goes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER], and he can yield opponents time.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I will yield half of the allotted time to my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON], for purposes of debate only.

AMENDMENT TO THE MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the motion to instruct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DANNEMEYER to the motion to instruct: At the end of the pending motion, strike the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following language: "; Provided further that the conferees be instructed to agree to the provisions contained in Senate amendment numbered 22."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half of the time to the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON], for purposes of debate only.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, if this motion to instruct now pending before the House is adopted, would it have the effect of amending the previous motion to instruct that was being considered and offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] so that, if this motion offered by the gentleman from California at this time is adopted, the House would then be voting on the contents of the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] is correct. The vote would then be on the motion to instruct instruct offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], as amended.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, on that I reserve the balance of my time, and I ask for an aye vote on my amendment to the motion to instruct.

□ 1850

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention or desire of prolonging the evening. We all have work to do, and I suspect I know how Members are going to vote, but I would like Members to know precisely what it is they are voting on. Sometimes that helps.

We have had this debate before. First of all, Members should know that in order to solve this problem, the gentleman from California has first had to create it. There is no problem.

Georgetown University is not seeking help of any kind and have asked us not to do what we appear to be on the brink of doing.

The gentleman from California suggested that there was a broad spectrum, I think he said of the Judeo-Christian tradition supporting his proposition. Let me read you very briefly three sentences from a letter signed by officials speaking on behalf of the United Methodist Church, the United Church of Christ, the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and the American Jewish Committee, the Unitarians and others. This is a letter to each of us:

As religious bodies, we are offended that the Congress would intervene in a moral question that is so controversial within the religious communities of this nation. By its terms, the amendment authorizes discrimination based on the advocacy of acceptance of homosexuality—a position that is the official view of many religious bodies.

I will skip some of this, but I would ask you to think seriously about this, and I am reading from the statement of the religious leaders. I will skip some of this and go on:

Finally, the singling out of a minority group for legal disadvantage is chilling.

This amendment singles out a single group in this Nation and explicitly authorizes discrimination against that group.

"While many religious groups—"and I read the end of the letter:

While many religious groups teach that homosexual activity is immoral, the action of Congress in legally authorizing special disadvantages for homosexuals as a group simply reaches too far. The frightening resemblence to discredited laws which authorized discrimination based on race makes this measure deeply objectionable.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if I may, a brief two sentences from Senator HATFIELD, if it does not violate the rules if I mention him, on behalf of the United States Conference of Mayors:

"In 1984,"—five years ago—"the Mayors expressed their support for the rights of all citizens 'regardless of sexual orientation, to full participation in American society'.

"The Conference of Mayors urges you to reject the Armstrong amendment and to uphold the right of localities to determine the course of human rights protection within their boundaries."

My colleagues, the legislation which the gentleman from California seeks to overturn is in law very close, similar provisions are in law at this very moment in the State of Wisconsin, in 16 counties and in 62 cities, presumably all 62 of which are represented in this Congress, including New York, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit, Atlanta, Boston, Raleigh, Chapel Hill, Tucson, Iowa City, Aspen, Evanston, and Dayton.

I would simply ask Members to reflect for one moment before we exercise our right to overrule the officially elected Representatives of the people of the District of Columbia in a fashion that we would not think for 1 minute of going back to our own States, our own counties and our own States and denying them that right.

By what conceivable right and on behalf of what conceivable cause would we at this time be asked to intervene in a fundamental question of human rights?

I would urge my colleagues simply to give this great thought before voting for the motion.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me express appreciation to the gentleman who has just spoken for what I know is a very difficult issue for all of us, and for the courage with which he has faced this issue, and I say that from the depth of my heart.

This Congress voted last year in support of this language, substantively in support of this language on a similar question, somewhat modified, and I would ask us to support the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] again tonight.

The issue reflects concerns which were raised in conjunction, first of all, with the Grove City bill in terms of what protections are given to the integrity of religious institutions governing their own internal religious affairs.

It is also, as we know, one of the more difficult issues relative to the forthcoming debate subsequently to come on this floor in regard to the Discrimination Act relative to the disabled.

It is a difficult issue and I am trying to be very, very sensitive to the concerns of the gay community and the issues of homosexuality, but the issue here is qualitatively different, I would argue, than the basis simply of male-female, that is to say identification by sex per se or gender. It is different than identification by race, because in this area it involves behaviors to which our religious traditions speak.

Ought not a religious institution, and is not a religious institution constitutionally protected relatively to upholding its own tenets in its own institutions? That is really ultimately the issue here, and I would put the question in that way with the greatest respect and love and consideration for those who would disagree.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

I simply want to call the attention of the House to what an extreme measure the Dannemeyer amendment is, and I hope because the amendment is to the Senate amendment and you do not know what that Senate amendment is, but what that Senate amendment says is that any educational institution that is affiliated with a religious organization or closely associated with the tenets of a religious organization may deny use of funds, service, facility or benefit, or the granting of any endorsement, approval, or recognition, to any person or persons that are organized for, or engaged in, or condoning—condoning any homosexual act, lifestyle, orientation, or belief.

So that if someone simply says, "I don't think that acts between consenting adults that are homosexual in nature are any of my business," that person, any group that says that, that adopts that position, can be discriminated against under the Dannemeyer amendment. That is exactly what this would do.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, indeed, is it not true that it reads that if any person, it is not only people so organized, so essentially a university can deny admission to someone, as the gentleman has described, and the District of Columbia cannot outlaw that.

Mr. GREEN. The gentleman is correct. It is person or persons. I think that is going very far in terms of chilling free speech if someone who simply condones something can be discriminated against on the basis of that condoning.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the way in which the gentleman has described the language. I do not dispute that.

Let me ask a similar question. What if a similar religious institution also wanted to deny admission or organized support for an organization let us say which is committed to atheism? Would it not have the right to do so based on the assumption that beliefs and behaviors contrary to the religious tenets of the organization supporting it are not compatible with the religious commitment of the institution?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, if I may reclaim my time, I think the amendment goes way beyond that, because it says that any person who may himself be deeply religious, but condones atheism in others could be discriminated against by the gentleman's analogy.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to the fact that a yes vote contains an affirmation of the language in the motion to instruct by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] on the drug language which I support.

It also supports the language that I refer to as the Armstrong language, adopted in the Senate.

Our colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts, referred to certain religious organizations in this country that support his point of view. I would like to read to my colleagues very briefly a list of religious organizations that support the motion that this gentleman from California seeks to offer:

ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE RELIGIOUS LIBERTY AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM AMENDMENT

National Association of Evangelicals.
Public Affairs Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention.
Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod.
Christian College Coalition.
Association of Christian Schools International.
American Association of Christian Schools.
The Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights.
Christian Legal Society.
Presbyterian Lay Committee.
The National Committee of Catholic Laymen.
The Forum for Scriptural Christianity within the United Methodist Church (known as the Good News movement).
Center for Catholic Policy.
Christian Legal Defense & Educational Foundation, Inc.

□ 1900

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York for the purposes of a parliamentary inquiry.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary inquiry is that the gentleman has stated that the pending business is his amendment and mine. My understanding is that the pending business is his amendment to mine, so that a vote in favor of his has nothing to do with my amendment other than to add it to it. Members are not voting for my amendment if they vote yes on the Dannemeyer amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUGHES). The gentleman is correct. The first vote will be on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the motion to instruct conferees. The second vote will be on the gentleman's motion, as amended by the gentleman from California or as not amended.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for the purposes of a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry, the Chair has now made two different rulings on this. When the gentleman from California asked the Chair previously what the order of business was, he asked specifically whether or not the next vote would be on a combined Green and Dennemeyer amendment. At that point the Chair ruled the gentleman was correct on that. The Chair now has told the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] something different. Can the Chair describe to us exactly what the parliamentary situation is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair earlier advised the gentleman from California that the amendment that the gentleman offered would be an amendment to the motion to instruct conferees to add additional instructions to the instructions that were directed by the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN]. The first vote will occur on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the motion to instruct conferees offered by the gentleman from New York. That will be the first order of business.

Mr. WALKER. So the likelihood is we would have two separate votes before the House?

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Members of this body, first of all, there has been a lot of conversation about what is in the language, and part of it has been read to the Members. Let me read the entire section. It will be very, very brief. The Armstrong amendment is on page 38, line 11, of H.R. 3026, and inserts the following language:

(b) Section 1-2520 of the District of Columbia Code (1981 edition) is amended by adding after subsection (2) the following new subsection:

And let me point out to all of the Members so that it is very clear that this language amends the District's code, so the first thing we are doing here this evening is instructing the conferees that we should amend the District of Columbia Code.

We are saying that home rule and local decisions by duly elected Democrats and Republicans are not important. We are doing something to the people of the District that we dare not do in our own communities.

Section 3 reads as follows:

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of the laws of the District of Columbia, it shall not be an unlawful discriminatory practice in the District of Columbia for any educational institution that is affiliated with a religious organization or closely associated with the tenets of a religious organization to deny, restrict, abridge, or condition—

"(A) the use of any fund, service, facility, or benefit; or

"(B) the granting of any endorsement, approval, or recognition, to any person or persons that are organized for, or engaged in promoting, encouraging, or condoning any homosexual act, lifestyle, orientation, or belief.".

As I read this, one does not have to engage in homosexual activity. If you were to promote it, encourage it or even condone it, you would fall within this class.

I recognize that there are people who are saying "vote," and I appreciate that the hour is late, but since we are taking such drastic action as it relates to an elected legislature's decisions, let us be clear so that everyone understands what we are doing.

As I indicated to the Members, this language is triggered by a controversy between Georgetown University and the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia has a human rights law, and they basically have said just the opposite of the Armstrong amendment, that Georgetown University or no other educational institution or organization can discriminate based on sexual orientation.

Georgetown University was engaged in a lawsuit, and subsequently entered into a consent decree which obviously both parties accepted. So once again, let me say that this issue is important enough for all of us to understand it, and not yell about voting here this evening.

Georgetown University agreed to a procedure whereby they would, in fact, provide the gay student organization with the same benefits and privileges that are provided to other student organizations on campus, but would not have to officially endorse positions of the gay student organization on religious grounds.

There is no argument with Georgetown University. Georgetown University is not coming here and asking anyone to do anything.

Second, the language last year directed the city government to make this change in their law, and the courts have said that we, as a legislative body, cannot direct them to do that based on the freedom of speech guarantee of the first amendment.

It is clear to me, regardless of the controversy about lifestyles in our society, that where a local duly elected government has made a decision for themselves and those they represent, and in this case Georgetown University has worked out a compromise and both parties to the court action have agreed to it, that Congress should not interfere. If we want to do that, it is to say that on any controversial issue in our society, we have a right to inject ourselves into the locally elected legislature's decision, and I think that is just flatout wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, I think the real issue here has been missed. This is a first amendment issue.

There is a conflict of rights here. There is a question as to whether an ordinance by the city council of the District of Columbia is superior to the first amendment, which guarantees freedom of religion.

Georgetown University, for good or for ill, is a Catholic university, and one of the tenets of the Catholic faith, a few progressive clergymen notwithstanding, is that homosexuality is sinful.

The question is: Do they have a right to that belief and may they exercise their freedom of religion in recognizing or legitimating or not recognizing or not legitimating organizations that espouse a lifestyle that to the believing, practicing Catholic is a sin.

Freedom of religion is in the Constitution. It is in the first amendment. Congress shall make no laws respecting an establishment of religion nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

I suggest to the Members, whether we agree or not, that that is superior to the notion of home rule and the District of Columbia ordinances. Georgetown University has a right to practice its religion, in whom it recognizes, whom it legitimates, and whom it does not. That is the issue and nothing more.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point I am making. Georgetown University entered into a legal, binding agreement.

Mr. HYDE. Recapturing my time, I read the letter from the president, and he said, "It cost us about $8 million. We could not afford it, and so we followed the line of least resistence." I am not proud of Georgetown. They should have vindicated their first amendment rights, but they did not, but we can do it here today.

□ 1910

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am a graduate of Georgetown University, and like all of my colleagues, I have no intention of transgressing upon the religious liberties of Georgetown University. They have the absolute right that I think every one of us on this floor would defend, not only in this forum but in others, to take the position that they believe, that homosexuality is a sin. That is their first amendment right.

What the District of Columbia said is that there are religious institutions who believe that the races ought to be separated, that in fact God created the races and if he had wanted them to be all together he would have made them so. All of my colleagues have heard religious sermons of that type, I am sure.

It is easy to pick on the weak among us, and that is what this amendment does. This amendment picks on a minority that is not popular. We know that. It picks on some people who are believed to be realitvely defenseless. We know that.

The District of Columbia has said that all of our citizens will be treated equally. Indeed, an atheist, or a young Democrat, or a young Republican at Georgetown may not reflect the views to which Georgetown University and its religious adherence subscribe. But we have a different country. We are a different country than the Soviet Union, or Bulgaria, or Romania, or indeed perhaps tens of others, perhaps hundreds more. We are a different country because we have given to every one of our citizens the right to hold their own beliefs, to condone the things that they think ought to be condoned.

This is not worthy of America. I have no brief or criticism for those at Georgetown who wants to hold, believing firmly in the religious tenets that they take from the New Testament and indeed the Old Testament that homosexuality is a sin. But there are other things in the Old and New Testament. Lying is a sin. Coveting thy neighbor's wife is a sin. There are other sins that can be enumerated that we will not impose upon institutions, but which we will say they should not discriminate upon.

This is an issue about America, and because it is subject to a 30-second ad that we can stand up and they can say, "Steny Hoyer is for homosexuals," and somehow put in fear those who will go to the polls and select STENY HOYER, may it always be that every one of us on the floor of this House has the courage to stand up to defend, yes, the first amendment rights, the first amendment rights of those homosexuals even at Georgetown who had the courage to stand up and say yes, I am a homosexual. For whatever reason, medical or otherwise, that is the condition in which I find myself.

The District of Columbia says because they have that courage we will not allow them to be discriminated against. My friends, stand up, stand up for the basic difference between this country and others. Stand up against the same kind of onslaught that we saw in Nazi Germany, the same kind of onslaught. None of us, none of us need condone the activity.

My friend, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HENRY HYDE, for whom I have a great respect, a great respect, stood on the floor of this House when we judged one of our Members and he implored us to hate the sin but love the sinner. In doing so he quoted from the Bible.

Let us do that tonight. Let us stand up for this country tonight, even in the face of the unpopularity of the group that we protect, because that is at the very heart of what our Founding Fathers had in mind.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, let me qualify my remarks by saying I love the sinners because I am one. Maybe hate is too strong a word for the sin, but that is not what I stand up here to underscore. I stand to underscore the lines of my senior and more eloquent colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE]. I would let his words sit except for one thing.

When I came to the Congress 12 years ago a reporter asked me what were the one or two things that I attributed to my arriving in Congress. I said first, my parents and second, my Jesuit education. For 7 years I studied under the Jesuits, and it was great. I did not know how great then, but I knew how great when I got in the Air Force, and in the private sector, and on television, and when I came to this House.

The focus is Georgetown, and it hurts me to hear HENRY HYDE say that he is ashamed of Georgetown, because I am also ashamed of the prior administration. But the priests and the scholastics and the hand-chosen civilians at the Jesuit school who taught me, those who are still alive, have communicated with me: "Bob, save us from ourselves for the gutlessness, a lack of spiritual fortitude and courage that we have shown by caving in for dollars in Federal grants." One of these Jesuit priests, now in his eighties, said to me: "What does it profit a great institution to gain a few dollars in some Federal grants and lose the soul of its principles?"

Georgetown, I can assure my colleagues, most of the students, most of the priests, and most of the civilian teachers want to be relieved of the mistake they made to have groups, particularly with freshmen and sophomores, formed around sodomy. They do not want it. Let us end it tonight.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I will not take my full minute. I want to clarify what the question is legally.

The question legally and the question constitutionally is simply this: Does a religious institution have the constitutional right to uphold its own tenets in the internal governance of its own institution? That is what we are voting on.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, the last time we voted on this matter, we were only warning the D.C. City Council. This time a vote for the Dannemeyer amendment is a vote to change an ordinance of the council.

I agree that the council made a serious mistake. Actually, I think the council customarily makes serious mistakes. But, I have been very reluctant to overturn a D.C. law, however misguided that law may be.

To me this vote is not over the question of free speech, nor the question of endorsing a homosexual lifestyle. I see this as a vote on home rule.

When Congress granted home rule to the District of Columbia, it retained the ability to second guess the city. I was under the impression that the authority would be used sparingly and in emergencies. I still believe that the people of the District should make their own decisions.

For that reason I shall vote against the Dannemeyer amendment even though I believe it represents responsible policy. In other words, the District should be permitted to make its own mistakes unless there is a significant health and safety issue or a national defense issue or a similar serious emergency.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, the issue before the House is whether Congress should change District of Columbia law to permit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

The District of Columbia Court of Appeals' decision between the gay rights coalition and Georgetown University stated that the university could not be forced to "recognize lesbian and gay student groups because that would violate the university's religious freedom." The court held, however, that the student groups were entitled under District of Columbia law to equal access to tangible benefits given other students.

This is a local matter and should be decided by a locally elected government, not by Congress.

My husband and two of my daughters are graduates of Georgetown University. My son is currently a Georgetown student. I am proud of Georgetown and strongly object to the university being used for the political purpose of promoting discrimination. In fact, Georgetown University does not support congressional action to overturn its agreement.

The Dannemeyer amendment has little to do with Georgetown and its dispute with a lesbian and gay student group which was successfully resolved some time ago. This amendment seeks to advance a blatant agenda of discrimination against lesbian and gay citizens. The amendment is offensive. I urge my colleagues to vote "no."

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUGHES). Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] to the motion to instruct conferees offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. POSHARD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL DOWN'S SYNDROME MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 122) to designate October 1989 and 1990 as "National Down's Syndrome Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reserve the right to object solely for the purpose of yielding to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD], the chief sponsor of the joint resolution.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, Down's syndrome is a disorder of the chromosomes which causes serious physical, intellectual, and language disorders. The exact cause of the disease is still not known and a prevention has been made in treating those who have the disease.

These individuals can benefit from loving homes, early intervention, special education, appropriate medical care, and positive public attitudes.

In adulthood, many persons with Down's syndrome hold jobs, live independently, and enjoy recreational opportunities in their communities.

Approximately 4,000 Down's syndrome children are born every year. This means there are nearly 250,000 families affected by Down's syndrome.

We neeed to promote better understanding of the disease and the people whose lives it touches. With greater public awareness and acceptance of this disorder, these individuals can take part in and contribute to our society.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that this legislation will heighten the awareness of this chromosomal disorder.

I want to thank the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] who has helped move this resolution forward.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 122

Whereas the past two decades have brought a greater and more enlightened attitude in the care and training of the developmentally disabled;

Whereas one such condition which has undergone considerable reevaluation is that of Down syndrome—a condition which, just a short time ago, was often stigmatized as a mentally retarded condition which relegated its victims to lives of passivity in institutions and back rooms;

Whereas through the efforts of concerned physicians, teachers and parent groups such as the National Down Syndrome Congress, programs are being put in place to educate new parents of babies with Down syndrome, to develop special education classes within mainstream programs in schools, to provide for vocational training in preparation for entering the work force, and to prepare young adults with Down syndrome for independent living in the community;

Whereas the cost of such services designed to help individuals with Down syndrome move into their rightful place in our society is but a tiny fraction of the cost of institutionalization;

Whereas not only the improvement in educational opportunities for those with Down syndrome, but also the advancement in medical science is adding to a brighter outlook for individuals born with this chromosomal configuration; and

Whereas public awareness and acceptance of the capabilities of children with Down syndrome can greatly facilitate their being mainstreamed in our society: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1989 and 1990 are designated as "National Down Syndrome Month" and that the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the designated month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ITALIAN-AMERICAN HERITAGE AND CULTURE MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 392) designating October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reserve the right to object simply to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ENGEL], the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, it is especially fitting that we in the U.S. Congress pass this resolution (H.J. Res. 392) to declare October 1989, as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month."

There are approximately 20 million Italian-Americans in this great country who has contributed much to the richness and welfare of this country, who have helped this country to prosper and grow and to be the strong country that it is.

This will ask the President of the United States to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe this month of October as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month."

As we approach 1992, which is the 500th year of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, it is especially fitting that Congress move now.

We are moving this. The Senate is moving it as well, and I look forward to seeing the President sign this resolution.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 392

Whereas Italians and Italian-Americans have contributed to the United States in all aspects of life, including art, science, civil service, military service, athletics, and education;

Whereas Italian-Americans make up one of the largest ethnic groups in the United States;

Whereas, in recognition of the accomplishments of Christopher Columbus, recognized as one of the greatest explorers in world history and the 1st to record the discovery of the Americas, a national observance day was established in October of every year;

Whereas the phrase in the Declaration of Independence, "All men are created equal", was suggested by the Italian patriot and immigrant Philip Mazzei;

Whereas during October 1989 special attention will be directed at local and State programs that promote Italian heritage and culture, with special emphasis on national programs such as the Italian Heritage Center at Catholic University of America; and

Whereas during October 1989 the National Italian American Foundation will host the 14th annual dinner to honor Italians and Italian-Americans making important contributions to the development of the arts, sciences, athletics, and education in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1989 is designated as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COUNTRY MUSIC MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 401) to designate the month of October 1989 as "Country Music Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so simply to acknowledge the efforts of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLEMENT], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. POSHARD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 401

Whereas country music derives its roots from the folk songs of our Nation's workers, captures the spirit of our religious hymns, reflects the sorrow and joy of our traditional ballads, and echoes the drive and soulfulness of rhythm and blues;

Whereas country music has played an integral part in our Nation's history, accompanying the growth of the Nation and reflecting the ethnic and cultural diversity of our people;

Whereas country music embodies a spirit of America and the deep and genuine feelings individuals experience throughout their lives;

Whereas the distinctively American refrains of country music have been performed for audiences throughout the world, striking a chord deep within the hearts and souls of its fans; and

Whereas October 1989 marks the 25th annual observance of Country Music Month: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of October 1989 is designated as "Country Music Month" and that the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the several joint resolutions just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

FORMER JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL REPRESENTS DRUG CARTEL

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WOLF. Madam Speaker, many were outraged by yesterday's Washington Post article, which I would like to include in the RECORD, about a former high-ranking Justice Department official who now makes his living by working to prevent Colombian drug kingpins from being brought to justice.

The threat of extradition to the United States is one of the most effective weapons in our war on drugs. Leaders of Colombia's drug cartels, who have little to fear from the courts in their own country, recognize that American courts will be tough on them. The Justice and State Departments have worked in the past few years to gain increased cooperation in this regard from other countries, so that extradition is now one of our strongest tools against international drug traffickers.

This article tells of how one man—who used to be the director of the Justice Department's Office of International Affairs—has been using the knowledge that he gained as a representative of the U.S. Government to undermine one of the most important U.S. policies in the war on drugs.

His actions on behalf of suspected drug kingpins include: testimony as an expert witness in the trial of Gilberto Rodriguez and Jorge Ochoa in Spain that the United States grand jury system was unfair, so that both individuals were returned by the Spanish court to Colombia, where they soon resumed their drug distribution networks. The cartels headed by these two individuals are estimated by the Drug Enforcement Agency to provide about 80 percent of all of the cocaine that reaches the United States each year. More recently he has drafted international treaty amendments that would significantly weaken the ability of the United States to gain extradition of drug traffickers, and even got the American Bar Association's house of delegates to adopt a resolution supporting these treaty amendments. He then lobbied staff members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in favor of these amendments.

This activity is despicable, and should be illegal. It should be in clear violation of the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

How can someone work for 14 years in an agency that's purpose is to enforce the laws of this country and to protect the public, and then turn around and use his expertise to try to undermine those same laws?

This is not an issue of whether accused drug traffickers should have a right to adequate legal representation. No drug trafficker should have the benefit of representation by a lawyer who learned his trade at the taxpayer's expense, and as a Government official was trusted with upholding our laws. I am deeply disappointed to think that a former Government official would accept such a client.

When I read this article, and I think of the crack that is getting into our schools destroying families and killing people in this country, it makes me sick.

The article follows:

CARTEL DEFENDANTS' D.C. LAWYER—EX-PROSECUTOR ANGERS FORMER JUSTICE DEPARTMENT COLLEAGUES

(By Michael Isikoff)

When the Justice Department began targeting Colombia's cocaine cartels in the early 1980s, Michael Abbell played a key role, heading the office charged with extraditing alleged drug traffickers to the United States.

Today, Abbell has carved a new niche in Washington's legal establishment. In a city where every special-interest group needs a lobbyist and every executive a lawyer, Abbell has been retained by the reputed bosses of Colombia's Cali cartel to advise them on how to avoid extradition to the United States.

Abbell, 49, an amiable Harvard Law School graduate, said that by representing the accused Cali kingpins he is doing nothing different from what countless other former federal prosecutors have done by representing criminal defendants.

"I don't see that there's any distinction between representing a person accused of one type of crime or another," he said during a recent interview. "And I've never been asked to do anything in any way, shape or form that would be professionally improper."

Nevertheless, Abbell's recent activities have taken him well beyond the boundaries of the courtroom. In the eyes of some critics, they have raised unsettling questions about the prospect of cartel influence in the United States.

Over the past year, Abbell—without disclosing his clients—has met with Senate Foreign Relations Committee staff members to propose international treaty amendments that Justice Department officials say would undermine a major new weapon in the prosecution of international drug traffickers. In August, over the continued protests of Justice officials, he drafted a resolution calling for such amendments that was unanimously adopted by the American Bar Association's House of Delegates.

Abbell acknowledged that he did not mention his representation of the cartel bosses to the committee staff. But he asserted that he was not acting on their behalf and that the changes he proposed were designed to protect constitutional rights in general: They would give defendants the same rights to obtain evidence from foreign governments that prosecutors would have under the proposed new pacts, called "mutual legal assistance treaties," now pending before the Senate.

But Abbell's critics, including Justice officials, say his amendments would almost certainly kill the treaties, prompting foreign governments to pull out of them, which would benefit Abbell's alleged drug lord clients.

"What I find outrageous is that it was his performance that inspired the opposition to the treaties" within the ABA, said Jack Blum, former chief investigator for the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on terrorism, narcotics and international operations.

"This goes beyond simple advocacy of people in need," Blum added. "What we have here is a lawyer clearly representing cartel interests who is working the Senate and trying to change a treaty * * *. The question that has to be put is, do we have a cartel lobbyist in Washington?"

That was not the only time Abbell has sought policy changes that could benefit his clients. Just last month, as Colombia's war with the drug cartels escalated, Abbell said he attempted to float a "compromise" between the U.S. government and the drug traffickers. Under his "exploratory" plan, presented to a State Department official, the traffickers would stand trial in the United States, so long as the U.S. government would let them serve their sentences in Colombia, he said.

State Department officials last week denounced Abbell's offer as "surreal" and "absolutely wacky," pointing out, among other things, that one of the main reasons the government is pushing so hard to extradite the traffickers is that no Colombian jail has been able to hold them.

"We don't accept proposals from drug traffickers," said a State Department spokeswoman.

But Abbell is undeterred and said he thinks such a plan is a "politically acceptable" solution to the deadlock over extradition. Under U.S. pressure, Abell argues, Colombian President Virgilio Barco has promulgated an "emergency" extradition decree that is not consistent with Colombian Supreme Court rulings—a long-term threat to Colombia's "democratic institutions," he said.

"What I'm proposing is something the Colombians would find more acceptable than simply shipping people off to the United States," he said. "We have to find a compromise solution." Abbell also said he thinks he "might" be able to sell his clients on the plan, "If the U.S. government wanted me to contact them, I would be willing."

Many legal experts note that over the past several years, Colombia's drug bosses have retained a battery of high-priced American lawyers besides Abbell to represent them in their legal skirmishes with federal prosecutors. Some of them—such as Miami lawyers Edward Shohat and Neal Sonnett (whose clients include Panama's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega)—are considered savvy courtroom gladiators widely respected among their peers.

They are also widely admired for their fees: When Shohat was retained two years ago to represent accused Medellin drug trafficker Carlos Lehder during his lengthy trial in Tampa, Fla., which ended in Lehder's conviction, Shohat and his co-counsel were reportedly offered $2.5 million.

But according to Blum and some other critics, Abbell represents a new wrinkle in the drug lawyer phenomenon—a relatively high-ranking Justice official (from 1979 to 1984, Abbell was director of the department's office of international affairs) who has been hired less for his courtroom experience than for his knowledge of internal Justice procedures and expertise in international law.

Abbell said his relationship with the accused Cali traffickers dates to the spring of 1985, about six months after he left the department, at a point when "I was just getting my feet on the ground, letting it be known I was out there."

At the time, he said, he got a call from a representative of Gilberto Rodriguez Orejuela (alias "the Chessplayer"), the alleged drug boss of Cali who was then under arrest in Spain with his traveling companion, Medellin cartel chief Jorge "Fat Man" Ochoa.

The arrest of Rodriguez and Ochoa in Spain—where they were believed to be laying the groundwork for a vast cocaine distribution network in Europe—set off one of the epic legal battles of the the drug war, a marathon fight in the Spanish courts over the U.S. Justice Department's petition to have the two accused drug barons returned to the United States to stand trial.

In what was perhaps his most controversial action, Abbell agreed to serve as an "expert witness" on Rodriguez's behalf, testifyng before a Spanish high court to the deficiencies in the extradition request filed by his old office at Justice.

At least one of Abbell's arguments was that Rodriguez had been indicted on drug trafficking in New York by a federal grand jury that did not adequately protect the rights of defendants. In effect, Abbell, a 17-year Justice employee, was telling a Spanish court the U.S. grand jury system was unfair—testimony that enraged Abbell's former colleagues and won him a stinging rebuke from a Spanish attorney general who was serving as prosecutor in the case, according to a Justice Department lawyer who was in the courtroom.

"The Spanish attorney general got up in court and said he considered it despicable that this person who has held public office has sunk so low," recalled the Justice lawyer, who asked not to be identified.

Abbell does not dispute the account. "The purpose of [my testimony] was to educate the foreign court as to what the meaning of a grand jury indictment is * * * that it is not a neutral inquiry," he said.

Abbell says he does not know precisely what the Spanish prosecutor said about his testimony because he does not speak Spanish. But as far as he could tell, he said, "He attacked me for being a turncoat. * * * You know people in Europe tend to make a career of government so possibly it was a foreign idea to him that someone who had been in government for 17 years would not be out representing defendants. Of course in the United States, it's part of the legal culture."

In the end, Abbell's testimony was rejected by the Spanish court, but it also turned out to be irrelevant to the outcome. According to Justice Department officials, Rodriguez's lawyers arranged for their client to be indicted on precisely the same charges in Cali as he had been in New York. Faced with identical indictments, the Spanish court had no choice but to return Rodriguez to Colombia, where, as expected, he was eventually acquitted and released from jail.

Ochoa, for his part, announced his willingness to stand trial in Colombia on relatively trivial, four-year-old bull-smuggling charges. He too was returned and quickly released. According to the Drug Enforcement Administration, the two alleged traffickers both returned to their old businesses, overseeing separate and increasingly competitive syndicates that process and smuggle about four-fifths of the cocaine that winds up on the streets of U.S. cities every year.

But Rodriquez's release did not end his need for Abbell's services. Over the past few years, Abbell said he has made about a "half-dozen" trips to Cali to meet with Rodriguez and his associates and advise them on avoiding continued U.S. extradition requests. (Rodriguez, his brother Miguel Rodriguez Orejuela and our other alleged Cali traffickers were recently named by Attorney General Dick Thornburgh to the Justice Department's list of 12 "most wanted" drug fugitives.)

Abbell makes no apologies for the relationship with the reputed Cali traffickers, whom he described as "mainstream" and "legitimate" businessmen who employ up to 5,000 people in pharmacies, banks and other companies.

More important, he said, his Cali clients should not be lumped with traffickers in Medellin, who he said are responsible for most of the assassinations and bombings that have convulsed Colombia in recent years.

"The U.S. government has given the impression that they are dealing with this unified entity called Colombian drug traffickers," Abbell said. "But the people in Cali have been adamantly opposed to any violence. * * * My impression is you can work with these people."

VACATING SPECIAL ORDER AND REQUEST FOR SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order granted to Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma for 60 minutes on Wednesday, October 4, be taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ON REFUGEE POLICY, ADMINISTRATION CANNOT PASS THE BUCK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LIPINSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have heard the administration offer many excuses for the inadequate and uninspired policies that have been the White House's response to remarkable opportunities at home and abroad.

I was disappointed by the adminstration's excuse that budgetary constraints kept them from offering Poland the assistance package that the struggling Polish people deserve. I was disappointed to see the administration claim that monetary constraints prevent the President from committing adequate resources to the war on drugs.

However, I was astonished to read Attorney General Dick Thornburgh's excuse for President Bush's handling of the refugee crisis in the Soviet bloc. In Sunday's Washington Post, the Attorney General explains that the only barrier to President Bush's "swift and humane" handling of the refugee crisis is congressional inaction. Aside from being another glaring attempt to pass the buck, Thornburgh's claim is simply untrue and devoid of facts.

As a Member of Congress who has spent the past several weeks urging President Bush to address the overflow of deserving refugees from the Soviet bloc, I take issue with Mr. Thornburgh's explanations.

The problem of Soviet bloc refugees is a question of American refugee policy. In the past year, hundreds of thousands who face persecution in their Communist homeland have sought entrance into the United States, and President Bush's annual refugee ceilings have been inadequate. The United States is turning away deserving refugees in droves, and turning its back on the American ideals of openness and freedom from oppression.

Contrary to Mr. Thornburgh's claim, the solution is completely in the President's hands. The President determines the yearly refugee ceilings, and has the power to raise the ceilings in emergencies. At the end of this fiscal year as the backlog in Soviet bloc refugee applications grew, I was joined by Majority Leader DICK GEPHARDT and DNC Chairman Ron Brown in urging President Bush to raise the ceilings for the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. I received no answer, the administration took no action, and the backlog continued to grow.

The President got another chance at a remedy in setting the refugee ceilings for fiscal year 1990. But the President's proposal was again inadequate. Although the State Department confessed a backlog of 47,000 Soviet refugees in Rome and Moscow, the President set the yearly quota at 50,000. This leaves no room for new applicants. Last week, 20 colleagues signed my letter urging the President to increase the 1990 ceilings for the Eastern bloc. However, the administration's quotas, including only 6,500 slots for Eastern Europe, remained at their insufficient levels.

The Attorney General claimed the Bush administration wants a humanitarian refugee policy. However, when asked about the Soviet ceiling, the administration's ambassador of refugee affairs explained that Israel is "willing to take them," or "they can always go back to Russia."

Unfortunately, Mr. Thornburgh's claim of compassion alone will not solve the problem in Italy. The President's immigration proposal would prove similarly effective. Immigration reform may prove the solution to the refugee crisis, but the flexibility afforded by 30,000 additional immigrants yearly will not begin to solve the problem.

Inadequate stopgap measures like this legislation or the Attorney General's parole status are becoming all too familiar under the Bush administration, as is the common plea that Congress is to blame.

Congress will soon address immigration reform, and our program will provide real, permanent solutions to the imbalance in immigration from Eastern Europe and the increase in refugees from the Soviet bloc.

I will soon propose a new category of immigrants for those countries historically denied emigration by Communist regimes and immigration by the United States' preference system.

Until the administration proposes real solutions to the refugee problem, the fault lies in the President's failure to address the issue. Blaming Congress, like blaming budgetary constraints, is no substitute for innovative policies and effective leadership. Mr. Bush's buck is already becoming worn and tattered.

GOLDEN RULE INSURANCE COMPANY RIPOFFS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, if the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act is repealed, there will be a big increase in the cost of Medigap insurance policies, and big increases in Medigap insurance profits.

One of the major reasons we have tried to improve Medicare is that it pays 98 cents in benefits for every $1 dollar in premiums. Private Medigap insurance policies, on the other hand, average 60 cents in payments for every $1 in premiums paid. Forty cents of every dollar is spent on profits, ads, sales forces, and so forth.

Why would anyone want to force seniors to rely more on this industry—an industry which has been notorious for deceptive and abusive sales practices to our most vulnerable citizens?

In particular I think we should take note of a campaign by a misnamed company, Golden Rule Insurance of Indianapolis, IN. Golden Rule has been running a series of ads in major newspapers such as the Wall Street Journal calling for repeal of the entire Medicare catastrophic care law. Since Golden Rule is a major issuer of medical insurance, this appeal is tainted with self-interest. However, that fact is conspicuously absent from the ad.

The ad describes the Catastrophic Act as a "Tax on Thrift," implying that seniors' savings will be taxed by the Government to pay for the coverage. Of course, Golden Rule doesn't disclose that when it issues Medigap policies it has no problem taking seniors' savings to pay for its policies. Golden Rule practices the same deceptive rhetoric it accuses Congress of.

There is, however, a crucial difference between the Government's and Golden Rule's actions. Medicare catastrophic coverage is available to everyone, rich or poor, healthy or sick. But Golden Rule's coverage targets only the rich and the healthy. Golden Rule urges seniors to work for repeal of universal coverage, but it won't put its money where its mouth is. According to Consumer Reports magazine of June of last year, Golden Rule refuses to insure 20 to 30 percent of seniors who apply for Medigap insurance. Citizens over 70 are treated even more shabbily: as many as half are rejected. Notice that the ad fails to mention this.

If getting covered by Golden Rule looks bleak, see what happened to 45,000 healthy Ohioans lucky enough to get past the gates and actually buy policies. In January the company tried to raise their rates by 85 percent.

The rate request was filed with the insurance commissioner on a Monday. Golden Rule wanted the increase approved—without a public hearing—by Friday. So much for the full disclosure extolled by the company in its anticatastrophic ad. The commissioner—to his credit—balked. At that point Golden Rule threatened to pull out of Ohio, leaving policyholders stranded, prompting a State official to describe it as "negotiating with terrorists." The company then began sending policyholders letters they required 30-day notice of cancellation, and said it was leaving because it couldn't wait any longer for approval.

The reason the commissioner wanted a public hearing? It had discovered Golden Rule inserting hidden clauses in old policies authorizing increases each year, any time Golden Rule felt like it.

Arbitrary actions appear to be the norm at Golden Rule. This March the company cancelled major medical policies for 20,000 Florida policyholders. The reason? The company was no longer making money on their business. Imagine what a notice like that would do to someone undergoing heart treatment or with a seriously ill child?

It was just this type of scenario that prompted us to pass the Catastrophic Act in the first place.

Of course, the ad campaigns and many like it, while alarming seniors with dire predictions of costly catastrophic taxes, fail to point out that private insurance, their only option, can be cancelled with no more than the silent tap of an actuary's calculator, a situation not true of Medicare.

This makes us ask, "What is going on with Golden Rule's anticatastrophic ad?" Could it be that Golden Rule, while unwilling to cover the poor and sick, is cynical enough to want to kill universal coverage in order to get the wealthy and healthy seniors' business? Knowing it can then bludgeon regulators and pop up the rates on captive policyholders?

What I think Golden Rule really wants is the easy work: To insure seniors who are easy to manage, who can pay substantial premiums with no problem, who will submit small claims, who are ripe for later premium increases.

Mr. Speaker, remember that one of the reasons we passed the Catastrophic Act in the first place was the failure or inability of private insurers to insure this age group. We had Medicare for 23 years without catastrophic coverage. What we found was rip-off private insurers selling bogus or double coverage, at outrageous prices, and the industry failing to take care of the problem. We gave Golden Rule a chance for 23 years. Of course, that is not part of their ad campaign.

Golden Rule just is not practicing what it preaches. Maybe it should reflect on the Biblical meaning behind its name, where "Golden Rule" means "Do Unto Others as You Would Have Them Do Unto You." Possibly the company subscribes to the meaning given on Wall Street, "Them That Has Gold Makes the Rules."

Unfortunately, the Wall Street connotation is why we passed catastrophic in the first place. It would do us well to remind ourselves that seniors' criticism of the Catastrophic Act is in part due to campaigns by entities like Golden Rule. We should reflect on the motives and behavior of groups like it before we once again consign the health of our citizens to them.

ANNUNZIO PRAISES CREDIT UNION TECHNICAL AID TO POLAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, the people of Poland have developed a mistrust for the state Communist Party-dominated financial institutions. There are billions of Polish-dollar equivalents in mattresses and under floorboards that could be used for the economic development of their country. They are looking to the United States for technical assistance. I recommend that we do all we can to help the people of Poland organize people-run institutions to do that.

Poland is stagnating because both zlotys and foreign currency are being stored at home instead of being pumped into the economy. A Solidarity representative who met with United States credit union officials recently estimated that the Poles are holding between $3 and $9 billion in mattresses or floorboards because of a lack of confidence in the state banking system. Long-suffering Poles fear their government-run banks may at any time forget the distinction between their money and its money and confiscate deposits.

The Poles believe that member-owned credit unions may be just the tool needed to pry money from under floorboards and out of mattresses by winning the Polish people's confidence—and giving a jolt to the whole economy. The Polish people want to set up financial cooperatives and then later convert them into credit unions. They have a real hunger for knowledge of cooperatives.

At hearings of the House Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance, which I chair, the Credit Union National Association [CUNA], a trade group, reported that it had met with Solidarity to discuss the possibilities of receiving technical assistance and expert advice in establishing Polish credit unions. In addition, we were told that Solidarity representatives met with the National Credit Union Administration, the Federal Government regulator, and toured U.S. Central, the credit union liquidity facility.

The Credit Union News, in an article about the meetings, said the World Council of Credit Unions [WCCU], which helped to set up the sessions, is moving cautiously and acting solely in an advisory capacity. The Council believes the Poles will have to make their own decision about whether credit unions are the answer to their problems. And that is the way it should be.

The WCCU is an international organization comprised of credit union federations in Europe, Asia, Africa, Latin America, and North America. The World Council promotes the formation and development of democratically run financial cooperatives.

The WCCU and the Credit Union National Association, working through the World Council, are prepared to provide technical assistance to a fledgling Polish credit union movement if asked to do so. CUNA is also prepared to provide financial assistance if needed.

Mr. Speaker, I joined in the sponsorship, with Congresswoman MARCY KAPTUR of Ohio, who is also a member of my subcommittee, of an amendment to an international banking bill which would express the sense of the Congress that the Treasury Secretary instruct officers of multilateral development banks to offer financial and technical assistance to Poles who want to establish financial institutions such as credit unions, thrifts, and commercial banks. I am pleased to announce that the full Banking Committee adopted the amendment unanimously by voice vote.

Quite frankly, the amendment does not go as far as I would like. An economically healthy Poland benefits not only the Polish people, but contributes to lower tensions between the East and the West. The unique characteristics of credit unions make them financial institutions perfectly suited for socialist countries moving toward market economies. I intend to continue my efforts to ensure that the Polish people get all the assistance they request in this area.

SENATE—Tuesday, October 3, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

"Our fathers' God to Thee, Author of liberty, of Thee we sing. Long may our land be bright with freedom's holy light, protect us by Thy might, great God our King."

Two hundred years ago today, October 3, 1779, President George Washington set apart Thursday, November 26, as a day to be devoted by the people of these United States to the service of that great and glorious Being, who is the beneficent Author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be. He proclaimed, "Whereas it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly to implore His protection and favor * * * and to unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions * * * to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue. * * *"

So help us God. In Jesus' name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized under the standing order.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this morning, following the time reserved for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business until 10 o'clock, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each. At 10 o'clock, the Senate will begin consideration of S. 1711, a bill to implement the President's 1989 national drug control strategy.

Debate on that measure will continue until 12:15 p.m., when the Senate will conduct a rollcall vote on a motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to H.R. 1231, the Eastern Airlines bill. Once that vote has been concluded, the Senate will stand in recess until 2:15 p.m. When the Senate reconvenes at 2:15, regardless of the outcome of the cloture vote, the Senate will resume consideration of the Zappala nomination in executive session.

Senators should be prepared for a session into the evening this evening and every day this week, with several rollcall votes possible.

Senators should also be prepared for a lengthy session late this week, possibly extending well into the weekend, as the Senate attempts to complete action on the reconciliation measure which we must move forward on the deal with the budget problem.

I recognize the inconvenience this may cause Senators in their schedules, but I want all Senators to be aware and on notice that there will be lengthy sessions throughout this week possible, and not just a possibility but the likelihood that the Senate will be in session this weekend as we seek to complete action on the reconciliation measure and on other measures to which we are committed for action this week.

CLEAN AIR LEGISLATION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, yesterday in a House committee, significant action occurred with respect to clean air legislation. Agreement was reached and by a unanimous committee vote new and more stringent standards applicable to automobile emissions were adopted.

This is a significant breakthrough and one which I believe will help move us toward the enactment of comprehensive clean air legislation in this Congress. I congratulate all those concerned in that progress, specifically Representative DINGELL, the chairman of the full committee, and Representative WAXMAN, the chairman of the subcommittee, both of whom have for many years had a keen interest in the matter and who now with good faith on both sides have been able to work out a meaningful and realistic compromise that should enable the House to act promptly on the matter and hopefully will contribute to Senate action as well.

This morning, and continuing throughout this week, the Senate Subcommittee on Environmental Protection is holding hearings on clean air legislation. I know that the chairman of that committee, Senator BAUCUS, is devoting considerable energy and effort to developing clean air legislation in the Senate.

It is my hope that such legislation will be ready for floor action either later this year or very early next year and that before long we will have, for the first time since 1977, reauthorization and an important extension of the Clean Air Act.

So I congratulate all those concerned in the House. I recognize that many difficult issues remain unresolved; that this is a matter of great interest to every Senator; and that we still are in the process of fashioning legislation here in the Senate. But I think that the events of yesterday have made final action much more likely, and for that I am grateful.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time and I reserve the time of the distinguished Republican leader as well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the time of the two leaders will be reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. GORE. I thank the Chair.

GILES COUNTY STANDS UP TO HATEMONGERS

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I want to take a moment to tell my colleagues about the good people of Pulaski, TN, and their courageous stand against the forces of hatred and division. A nation longing for unity could learn a lot from Giles County.

Next month, against the wishes of the people of Pulaski, a white supremacist group known as the Aryan Nations is coming to their town to stage a march of racism and bigotry.

No one in Giles County shares this group's heinous views. In fact, since the parade of hate was announced, outspoken civic leaders and citizens have denounced the Aryan Nations and everything it stands for. These hatemongers received a parade permit only because the town had no legal or constitutional recourse to deny it.

But even though the town cannot prevent the march, the people of Pulaski are determined to show the world that they do not condone it. Outraged citizens have joined together to form Giles Countians United, which is already leading a counterdemonstration in the name of brotherhood. The people of Pulaski are making it clear that they will "no longer suffer in silence when outside forces of bigotry and hatred besiege our county and by their presence, diminish our reputation and falsely portray us as willing hosts to their displays of discrimination."

When the racists come to town in October, the people of Giles County are going to make it clear that their repulsive views are not welcome. Dozens of businesses have agreed to close up for the day, and to post signs that say, "This store will protest the presence of the Aryan Nations." Residents are tying orange banners and ribbons—the international symbol of brotherhood—on every building, every tree, and every lamppost. Citizens have distributed and signed petitions denouncing the racist invasion, and every day, they are delivered to the Aryan Nations headquarters in Hayden Lake, ID.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to lend the people of Giles County their support and their prayers. It takes courage to stare hatred in the face. Aryan Nations followers are believed to be responsible for several bombings and the murder of Denver talk show host Alan Berg. The group advocates the overthrow of the Federal Government, an end to religious freedom, and the elimination of all nonwhite races. Now it is trying to forge alliances with the Ku Klux Klan and other hate groups—including violently racist skinhead youth. The Pulaski march is its latest desperate attempt to garner publicity.

Such brazen bigotry may win them some attention, because it is too hateful to ignore, but it will not win any followers in Pulaski or anywhere else in Tennessee. Quite the contrary. The people of Giles County know what they are up against, and they are not about to give in. They are not about to listen to the gospel of evil or acquiesce in the worship of hate. When their hate march is over, the hatemongers will know one thing for sure: the Aryan Nations has no friends in Giles County, and racism will never find a home in Tennessee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an excellent article by Larry Daughtrey, entitled "Pulaski Has No Room for the Vermin," which appeared in the Nashville Tennessean on September 10, 1989.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PULASKI HAS NO ROOM FOR THE VERMIN

PULASKI, TENN.—Anyone who thinks real American political values have shattered ought to visit this pleasant little town of 7,530 on the Alabama border in Middle Tennessee.

Pulaski has two modest historical monuments which recently have become burdensome. One is a courthouse statue of Sam Davis, the quixotic "boy hero" of the Confederacy who was hanged in Pulaski by Union troops after refusing to identify his espionage associates.

The other is a small metal plaque half the size of this page a block away from the statue, identifying the law office where an early branch of the Ku Klux Klan sprouted—and died—at the end of the Civil War. The modern Klan started 40 years later in Georgia.

Ironically, the law office today houses the local public defender, Bob Massey. Like most of the rest of Pulaski, Massey is indifferent to the skin color of those who come and go around the town.

This is not a hotbed of racial tensions. Indeed, Pulaski, which is 27% black, has a long history of progressive politics and leaders such as the late Supreme Court Justice Joe Henry and former Sen. Ross Bass. Its schools integrated early and quietly; the student body president today is black. It's a town where a restaurant operator tells new employes; "If you've got any of this racial stuff in your head or heart, get out. Stomachs are the same color."

Several years ago, various groups of the Klan began parading in Pulaski each January to protest the federal holiday honoring Martin Luther King. They were drawn by the little metal plaque.

For the most part, the Klansmen are a bunch of comical beer-bellied windbags distinguished only by the stench of their rhetoric.

Earlier this year, the Klan was joined by a few skinheads, young jackbooted racists with a new stripe but the same odor. Young Pulaski blacks jeered, and there was an exchange of rocks and bottles and shoving.

Pulaski leaders discovered to their dismay that legally they could nor deny this group of outsiders the right to assemble, parade and speak without infringing on the First Amendment of the Constitution.

Now, a new group has applied for and, grudgingly, been given a parade permit for Oct. 7. They are the Aryan Nations, a fringe group of white supremacist vermin who preach sedition and racial hatred with great fervor.

They idolize Adolph Hitler and his fallen "Aryan warriors." Their members have: bombed school buses, machinegunned a Denver disc jockey who mocked them, planned to kill Jews including Henry Kissinger, schemed to poison the water supplies of New York and Washington, robbed armored cars to finance their operations, set up a point system for assassinating blacks, police, and other officials, with the President of the United States worth 10 points.

And they're coming to Pulaski Oct, 7, inviting their skinhead sympathizers to march along.

Pulaski residents have had enough. They're tired of seeing network film clips of looney toons using their town as a backdrop for messages of hate.

"This town is a good place to raise a family, whether you're black or white," says local banker Gary Harrison. "It doesn't deserve this rap."

If they can't stop the demonstration, Pulaski residents can show the world their disgust at its message.

They're doing it with the color orange, the international color for peace and brotherhood. Orange ribbons are flying from pickup antennae, store windows, bank lobbies, utility poles, even the high school football helmets.

Virtually the whole town will close Oct. 7; the hate mongers won't be able to buy a gallon of gas, a cup of coffee, a hamburger. They will be surrounded instead by a sea of orange, a silent reminder that Pulaski has no tolerance for intolerance.

Pulaski deserves some moral support from the rest of the state; orange ribbons ought to be flying everywhere. Nazi scum should be told there's no rock in all of Tennessee they can crawl under.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN].

SEMICONDUCTORS AND EC-92

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the situation facing the United States with respect to the European Economic Community. Frankly, I am concerned about the direction in which the economic integration of the European Community is headed, particularly with respect to the semiconductor industry. Commonly known as EC-92, this program will ultimately result in a truly common market among European nations as commercial and trade barriers between these nations disappear.

I believe that EC-92 can be a plus for the United States. A prosperous and growing European economy can mean a healthy market for U.S. goods and services and a stable and confident military and political ally.

However, this plus can quickly become a negative if access to the European market is denied to U.S. firms and EC-92 becomes Fortress Europe. Unfortunately, that is exactly what seems to be happening in certain cases.

For example, last February the EC changed its rule of origin governing semiconductors. Previously, testing and assembly of a semiconductor in Europe was sufficient to qualify it as "made in Europe." Under the new rule, all processes in manufacturing semiconductors, beginning with and including fabrication, must be conducted in Europe in order for the semiconductor to be considered European.

This change is especially significant when taken in conjunction with changes in the application of Europe's so-called screwdriver assembly laws. These laws originally required a certain percentage of components in Japanese-imported products to be non-Japanese. The purpose of these laws was to prevent Japan from simply importing products in a knockdown kit form for screwdriver assembly in Europe under the label "made in Europe." However, the newest interpretation of these laws has become to mean European components, not non-Japanese. Thus, America components are now discriminated against, in practice while not in law.

The result of these changes is that U.S. firms, semiconductor firms especially, are flocking to Europe. Not because it is such a good investment decision but because they believe that they have to if they wish to remain in the European market. Intel Corp. has just announced that it will open a semiconductor facility in Dublin. This will be its first facility of this kind outside of the United States. Up until now, all of their chips were made in the United States, many in my home State of New Mexico. The Dublin plant expects to create 2,600 jobs. That is 2,600 jobs that aren't going to Albuquerque or Phoenix, or Portland, OR, or Folsom, CA—even though Intel could have just as easily increased production at these U.S. sites.

I believe that the reason for decisions such as this by many American firms is clear. What else is a company to do? The word has gone out that if you wish to sell in the European market, you better have your factories here as well. This type of covert protectionism is simply intolerable and, I should add, invites retaliation by this country.

In addition, there are more overt protectionist actions either on the books or being contemplated. European tariffs on semiconductors are 14 percent, while the United States has zero tariffs. The European telecommnications market remains generally closed and a 50-percent domestic content requirement is being discussed. At least four European nations maintain domestic content requirements on automobiles. Government procurement restriction in Europe generally far surpass any "buy America" provision in U.S. law.

Mr. President, these types of measures hit directly at American economic interests and are untenable. It is not my intention to propose sweeping new trade laws. I merely wish to point out the dangerous direction in which I see Europe moving. To this, I would add a word of caution. The American public will not stand idly by while others close their markets to our products. Nor will they accept the continued denial of fair access to markets—European or Pacific rim. At some point, the American public will demand true reciprocity—domestic content or screwdriver assembly regulations in Europe and closed markets in Japan will only lead to reciprocal actions by the United States. My message is clear—if you expect open access to the U.S. market, then we must have open access to yours. Nothing less will be adequate.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll, the absence of a quorum having been suggested.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

CONTRIBUTIONS IN AID OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, when the Finance Committee meets this week to consider budget reconciliation legislation, I urge my colleagues on the committee to accept a position restoring pre-1986 contributions-in-aid-of-construction treatment of water utilities. The distinguished Senator from Idaho, STEVE SYMMS, has requested inclusion of this provision. It would be an important first step toward enacting legislation I introduced earlier this year.

My bill, S. 435, would repeal the 1986 Tax Reform Act's treatment of contributions in aid of construction. The tax exemption for these contributions was stripped in 1986, but will be reinstated with my bill.

The contributions that will be exempt from taxation are those that builders pay utility companies to extend services to their sites.

Although the new tax imposed on these contributions was presumably going to contribute to increased funds for the Federal Treasury, the costs of such a decision have proven to outweigh any tax revenues.

Instead of utilities carrying the burden of the tax, as was expected, utilities passed this cost on to consumers in the form of higher rates.

In some cases, the tax burden was shifted back to builders. They then turned around and incorporated that extra cost into the purchase price of their homes.

Affordable housing was enough of a problem before this tax exemption was repealed in 1986. Reinstatement of the tax exemption could save a prospective homebuyer as much as $2,000.

Mr. President, my bill to reinstate the tax exemption for contributions in aid of construction was to apply to all regulated public utilities that are required to provide services ranging from electricity, gas, water, and sewage disposal. The bill has 27 cosponsors and enjoys strong support from utilities, regulators, business, industry, and consumer organizations.

Senator SYMMS joined with me as an original cosponsor on this bill. Now he makes a valid point—he says that revenue constraints keep us from reinstating the tax exemption for all utilities simultaneously.

His approach suggests that we proceed one step at a time and that, this year, we accept a reconciliation provision that will exempt only water utilities from the tax on contributions in aid of construction. Ideally, I would like to see the contributions in aid of construction tax exemption reinstated for all utilities, but the cost to the Treasury is prohibitive at this time.

I am, therefore, supportive of according the exemption solely to water utilities this year, with the intention of revisiting the issue next year to address the other utilities.

This is not a unique approach. In fact, there is precedent for addressing some utilities first, as was done in 1976, and then addressing other utilities later, as was done in 1978.

Exempting only water utilities this year would be an acceptable and desirable first step toward reinstating the tax exemption.

The proposal by Senator SYMMS is fiscally responsible and economically desirable. I offer my strong support for inclusion of this provision in the budget reconciliation bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of no quorum having been raised, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

SHORT-TERM POLITICS AND LONG-TERM PROBLEMS

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, one of the most important lessons I ever learned when I was in business was that achieving short-term profits at the expense of long-term survival was one of the worst things you could do. I remember, Mr. President, one time—and this happened often when profits were declining and our cash-flow was getting tight—some of my associates wanted to compensate for that by squeezing employee salaries and employee benefits. They argued that that would offset declining revenues and bring us through the quarter with an acceptable profit-and-loss statement.

It was a tempting proposition, Mr. President, but we had built our business on the notion of good service to consumers at all times, and we recognized that if we punished our employees by cutting their wages and their profits, they would ultimately punish our customers and hurt and even destroy our business in the process.

In other words, the short-term fix would hurt instead of help long-term success. So we found another way, oftentimes to muddle through and get through immediate problems, and we managed to keep on investing in a strategy which brought us in our business long-term success.

I bring this up, Mr. President, because I think we are focusing and facing the same kind of short-term, long-term dichotomy in Congress at this time. My experience in business convinces me that if we yield to short-term politics, we will fail to deal with long-term problems. I was moved to think about the need to look at the long term by two reports released recently: One by the Census Bureau and one by the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families.

The Census Bureau report demonstrated that one-fifth, 20 percent, of American children now live in poverty. Twenty percent of the next generation of leaders grows up in a house in our great country where food and heat and housing are always in doubt.

The other report, issued by the select committee, was even more stark. Nearly half of all black children in our country now live in poverty. Half of the black kids in the United States of America live in poverty: fifty percent.

Mr. President, what society can accept that? Mr. President, what society can survive that? How can we and our economy expand when these kids cannot find or fill the kind of jobs our society is going to be creating in the 21st century, jobs which will require technological skill and a good level of literacy. How can our society improve when these kids will grow to maturity in bodies that have not been allowed to fully develop, with minds that have been starved with a vision that does not expand beyond the constant search for food, clothing, and shelter? And yet we are not really dealing with these kids. We go to a summit to talk about education, but we do not spend the money we need to reduce teacher-student ratios, get decent textbooks in our schools, or even remove the asbestos which threatens the health of our kids. Mr. President, where are we going? Mr. President, what are we doing?

Sometimes I am afraid that I know the answer. The administration has made it clear we are going to focus on policies based on the old trickle down economics—help the rich and let them help the rest; help the rich and hope that economic growth will follow.

Mr. President, I care about economics and business growth. I do not care just in this quarter but I care about it in the next quarter century. But if business is to expand and people are to make profits, we have to get our house in order. We have to give business the kind of workers it needs. We have to give business the kind of economic environment it requires. That means we have to stop this deficit, that we have to stop fooling ourselves with Gramm-Rudman claims of progress which just hide deficits that have never declined.

This is not only politics, Mr. President. This is serious business. How is business going to prosper, how is our economy going to expand, how are people going to better their lot in life if we do not address these questions? But we are not addressing these questions, Mr. President. We are not looking beyond the next quarter, the next election, the next Gramm-Rudman deadline, the next bill. We are stumbling forward and it just is not good enough anymore.

Sometime in the next few weeks we will be making a decision about short-term desires and long-term needs when we vote on various capital gains tax cut proposals. In a perfect world, in a world without a budget deficit and with adequate resources to pay for the things we need, a cut in the capital gains rate might make good sense.

It is not a perfect world and as desirable as a reduction might be in the short term, it will not help us address our long-term needs.

Let us look at this issue for a minute from a couple different perspectives:

First, in terms of pure economics, will a capital gains cut produce the kind of economic activity which benefits people? There is room for debate on this issue, but the best economic advice we can get says "no." There will be a short-term stimulus as people run to sell their holdings and that might boost the general economic level of activity. That is why economists predict a short-term increase in Federal revenues. But that activity is not driven by investment strategy or business imperatives. It will be driven by tax consideration, and I think that is wrong. I trust business a whole lot more than politicians to decide what investments should be made, but yet the capital gains break puts these decisions back into the politicians' hands.

Just 2 years ago, when we adopted the Tax Reform Act, we were trying to minimize the role that tax considerations played in investment decisions. Now we are adopting a policy whose only benefit derives from decisions dictated by tax policy.

As a result I am not impressed by the short-term benefits of a cut in the capital gains rate, but I am downright distressed by the long-term consequences—a decrease in Federal revenues caused by a decrease in investment and economic activity.

This is not a riverboat gamble where we do not know what the long-term consequences of tax cuts might be. We do know. We know the cards are marked. We know the odds are stacked against us. We know we cannot win, and some people want to keep playing.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I happen to be in that upper 1 or 2 percent of the people in this country economically. I do not need a capital gains break. Right now on a dollar of profit, I am allowed to keep 72 cents. That is good enough. I do not need to be allowed to keep 91 cents while people in this country are going hungry, while we are not educating our young, while the deficits are getting worse, while we are not addressing poverty and homelessness, and while we are not taking care of our environmental problems. People like myself do not need to be given a tax break in today's economic climate. I urge my colleagues to consider our situation in this country as it is and not as we would like it to be. We have needs that are not being met. We dare not aggravate the problem by offering more sop to those people in this country who are very wealthy and do not need it.

I thank the Chair.

TROUBLING TRENDS IN THE AIRLINE INDUSTRY

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this body has committed a significant portion of time and energy addressing the unexpected side effects of deregulating the savings and loan industry. While deregulation of the airline industry has not yet brought the catastrophic troubles of the savings and loan crisis, there are troubling trends in the industry which Congress must address now.

The Commission which will be established by the amendment to be offered to H.R. 1231 will afford the American people an opportunity to examine that state of the American airline industry and the competitive environment in which it operates. The Commission will assist the Congress in developing appropriate airline industry policy.

The increase in mergers, acquisitions, and bankruptcies of savings and loan institutions is being paralelled in the aviation industry.

From 1983 to 1987, the market share of the top eight airlines increased from 74 to 91 percent.

Only 5 of the 22 airlines that entered the domestic market since deregulation are still operating as separate entities.

The result for consumers—loss of essential services and higher fares.

When Eastern Airlines filed for bankruptcy back in March, service was disrupted up and down the east coast. Some small communities are still struggling to meet the demands of the flying public.

Last week another major airline—Braniff Airlines—filed for bankruptcy and laid off half of its work force.

Travel agents from the Kansas City area, where Braniff has been trying to build its hub, have expressed serious concern about the consequences for area travelers.

Braniff officials cited the difficulties in competing against the Nation's eight largest carriers as a contributing factor to the bankruptcy filing.

Leading travel indicators also reflect an upward trend in ticket prices.

The cost of flying has risen from a 1988 average of 24 cents per mile to a 1989 year-to-date average of 30 cents per mile.

Earlier in the year the New York Times reported that the reduction in Eastern flights was enabling other airlines to offer fewer discount seats.

Last week, the media reported an expected airline fare increase of 10 to 20 percent.

The fate of Eastern Airlines, once a dominant carrier on major Eastern United States routes, and the recent bankruptcy at Braniff Airlines raise serious questions abut the structural security of the airline industry.

Can we sustain a competitive airline industry in the deregulated market?

I supported Congress' decision to deregulate the industry a decade ago and I continue to support the basic concept of allowing the marketplace to be the primary determinant of routes and of fares.

But I also recognize that this series of disturbing incidents needs to be closely scrutinized.

We must determine the appropriate Government role in maintaining a competitive airline industry.

To date, no entity has taken a comprehensive look at the Eastern situation or its implication for the overall health of the airline industry.

For more than a year, the National Mediation Board focused on labor and management disputes.

The bankruptcy court has focused for 6 months on the economic stability of the company and its responsibilities to its creditors.

The Department of Justice, and Department of Labor, the Department of Transportation, and even the Department of the Treasury have all dealt with the Eastern situation within the boundaries of their particular jurisdiction.

But this piecemeal approach is not efficient or effective for addressing the broader issues at stake.

This amendment proposes an avenue for taking that much-needed comprehensive look.

By establishing a temporary commission to investigate the recent occurrences in the airline market and the consequences of these trends in the airline industry, Congress will gain the information it needs for future policy making on aviation issues.

GUSSIE BUSCH IN VIVID COLOR

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I remember Gussie Busch in vivid color. I believe the same is true of everyone whose life was touched in some way by August A. Busch, Jr. You never forget Gussie Busch.

When he died last Friday at the age of 90, people in Missouri and in Gussie's beloved St. Louis were asked, of course, to remember Gussie Busch. They recall a person of vision, terrific business acumen, and extraordinary personal qualities.

Pat Hickey remembers "a down-to-earth guy, nothing phony about him." Truer words never were said.

"Impatient in the good sense," said the Reverend Paul C. Reinert, the chancellor of St. Louis University. "* * * kept you on your toes." Yes, Gussie Busch kept people on their toes.

Tom Uhlenbrock of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch talked with workers at Anheuser-Busch about Gussie. The verdict is that Mr. Busch was tough but fair, a demanding boss, a good boss, and a boss who cared about the workers.

I would commend Mr. Busch's life and work to the attention of my colleagues with an emphasis on three qualities. The first is love for life. The second is vision. The third is love for his town, St. Louis.

The love of life, when deeply and truly felt, recognizes that life is a gift and that it is good. Gussie Busch was one of those people who know that life is the greatest gift of all. One sensed that he knew this from the moment he was born; he did not need to remind himself how good are life, the world, and other people. He knew it. He was a natural. He was Gussie.

From the love of life flowed his characteristic vision and his lifelong devotion to his town, St. Louis. He gave us the best beer in the world. I doubt that it ever occurred to him simply to make a pile of money brewing a pretty good beer. No way. He would brew the best beer in the world, sell more of it than anybody else, have the best advertising, the best distributors, and a symbol—the Clydesdales—that would be famous around the world.

To be the world's foremost brewer of beer would not be enough, however. He and St. Louis would have the best baseball team in the world, the Cardinals. And the Cardinals would play in a beautiful modern stadium. When you are the world's greatest baseball team, then a season without the pennant is simply the year before your next pennant. A year when you sit out the World Series is simply the year before you win the next series. What a wonderful, wonderful way to approach the game of baseball.

Such was the quality of Gussie Busch's vision: The best—no ties, no second place finishes. Such vision is part and parcel of the spirit that made this Nation the greatest in the world. The kind of vision offered by Mr. Busch compels certain answers to certain questions. Is this the greatest country in the world? Certainly. Can we be the best? Of course, if we choose to be. Should we choose to be the best? Obviously. How do we get become the best, at beer or baseball or building cars or anything else? The answer is self-evident: By deciding that we will not settle for anything less.

Finally, there is Gussie Busch's special place in St. Louis. Mr. Busch wore many hats. One hat was that of "City Father, First Class." Another said, "Sort of Permanent Mayor." Another read, "Mr. Baseball." Another was philanthropist. Another was major employer. Gussie had an attitude about St. Louis that each of us should have about our community—that it is the best place in the world, with a style all of its own, and that it will be even better tomorrow than it is today.

I never will forget Gussie Busch. Nor will St. Louis. Nor will the President and First Lady, who said that Gussie Busch was a legendary figure. Nor will anyone who knew him ever forget Mr. Busch. To the extent that we remember his zest for life, his vision and his devotion to his town, we will be doing him an honor he would appreciate and we will be doing ourselves and this Nation a service.

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION PROCEDURES AND PRACTICES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on September 21, Joan D. Aikens and John W. McGarry—the President's two nominees for reappointment to the Federal Election Commission [FEC]—testified before the Senate Rules Committee. I asked each of the nominees to respond to a series of questions I had about FEC decisions, procedures and practices, and I would like to make their responses part of the RECORD.

Since both of the nominees currently serve as members of the Federal Election Commission, I believe that their responses provide insight into the inner workings of the FEC. Both nominees were reported out favorably by the Rules Committee on September 27.

I ask unanimous consent that my questions and the answers provided by Commissioner Aikens and Commissioner McGarry be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following my remarks.

I suggest that each of my colleagues take a moment to review this material before the Senate takes action on these nominations.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESPONSES OF COMMISSIONER JOAN D. AIKENS AND COMMISSIONER JOHN WARREN MCGARRY TO QUESTIONS SUBMITTED BY SENATOR ROBERT DOLE DATED SEPTEMBER 21, 1989

1. Given the backlog in the FEC audits of Presidential campaigns, wouldn't it make sense to contract out the audits to public accounting firms? It would seem that such a move would improve both the quality and speed of audits. I assume the Commission has looked into this before, and I would be interested in what conclusions the Commission reached.

In preparation for the 1984 Presidential election cycle and the mandated audits conducted thereafter, the Commission did a full study on the best and most efficient way in which to complete those audits. We considered several different proposals including the use of independent audit and accounting firms, and came to the conclusion that this method would not be practical or feasible given the nature and complications of the audit process under the Federal Election Campaign Act. Our study showed that the use of independent audit and accounting firms in the public financing audits would actually increase the Commission's time and cost.

Compliance-based audits required by the statute are much different in concept from routine financial audits generally performed by such accounting firms. The contracting-out of Presidential audit fieldwork in this manner would actually increase the length of time to complete these mandatory audits by adding at least one new task—that of training the audit staff of private accounting firms to conduct compliance-based audits. We had developed, at that time, a core staff of auditors, not only highly skilled in the audit process, but sensitized to the unique problems and issues that arise during the course of high-stakes, high visibility Presidential campaigns.

The study showed that the proposal would be very costly, considering the high cost of contracting with CPA firms, and the necessity to maintain an audit staff to administer the contract, review the work, do necessary follow-up and other audit work. The Commission concluded that the option would involve a duplication of effort to produce the same product at a much higher cost for the 1984 Presidential election cycle, and voted unanimously not to adopt this proposal.

The Commission did adopt, also by a unanimous vote, a proposal to conduct the mandatory audits of publicly financed presidential campaigns with in-house audit staff but to supplement that staff, as needed, by auditors from other government agencies on a temporary basis.

Subsequent to this vote, the Commission reached agreement with the Comptroller General of the General Accounting Office, Charles A. Bowsher, for an arrangement whereby GAO auditors would be temporarily detailed to the Commission for several months during the audit season on a non-reimbursable basis, at no cost to the Commission. This contract with the General Accounting Office was reinstituted for the 1988 Presidential audit cycle.

2A. Does the Commission still support doing away with state expenditure limits in Presidential primary campaigns?

Every year, the Commission is required by law to submit legislative recommendations to Congress. This year, the Commission submitted thirty legislative recommendations all of which were unanimously approved by the Commission for submission to Congress. As it has in previous years, the Commission this year approved a recommendation that state by state limitations on expenditures for publicly financed presidential primary candidates be eliminated.

Based on its experience from four Presidential elections under the state expenditure limitations, the Commission believes that these limitations could be removed with no material impact on the process. In the event that Congress adopted this recommendation and so amended the statute, such a change would reduce a significant accounting burden on Presidential campaigns and an equally significant audit and enforcement task for the Commission.

2B. When conducting Presidential audits, what percentage of its time does your audit staff spend looking into matters of state expenditure limitations?

The Commission has not maintained separate records on the hours expended to administer the state by state expenditure limitations. It is, however, possible to estimate what portion of the effort expended in the Presidential area relates to monitoring the State expenditure limitations. Based on the Commission's 1984 Presidential audit experience, and our experience from the 1988 election cycle to date, we estimate that our audit staff spends on an average of between 40–50% of its time reviewing and auditing records of Presidential campaign receiving public funds relating to disbursements subject to the state by state expenditure limitations. This estimate reflects the great variation in the way Presidential campaigns are structured and conducted.

2C. Given the Commission's limited resources, does it make sense for the Commission to devote so much of its time and resources to reviewing those state expenditure limitation questions which the staff acknowledges have been "close?"

Under the statute as currently drafted, the Commission is required to review all matters arising out of Presidential campaign audits relating to disbursements, including but not limited to, the state by state expenditure limitations. As a result of audit review, many "close" legal and factual questions do arise. Questions relating to allocating Presidential campaign expenditures to the states are some of the most difficult questions raised under the law. The complexity and frequency of these questions necessitates thorough review and deliberation by the Commission that is admittedly time-consuming. Resolution of these close questions, however, is exactly what the Commission is mandated to accomplish under the statute. The statute is very specific as to the requirements of the state by state limits and unless or until Congress amends the law to eliminate those limitations, the Commission believes we are obligated to enforce the law.

3. Each of you has served on the Commission for a number of years. Your time there has given you much experience. However, there has been no one appointed to serve on the Commission from the outside in more than five years. Would limiting commissioners to two terms insure that new ideas and outlooks were brought into Commission determinations?

While the appointment of individuals from the outside may bring new ideas and outlooks into the Commission's determinations, those potential benefits would be more than offset by the loss of valuable experience in the administration of the federal election campaign laws, experience that can only be developed over time.

The proposal to limit Commissioners to two terms would effectively create a new body of law periodically and eliminate most, if not all, of the historical precedents upon which the regulated community depends. This loss of continuity and consistency in the Commission's decisions could result in confusion and chaos for the regulated community.

4. From a procedural standpoint, it is my understanding that your general counsel sits at the Commission table acting as the Commission's counsel during enforcement proceedings. However, the general counsel or his staff member also presents the case (essentially prosecutes) enforcement matters. On the other hand, a respondent can usually only provide written arguments. These procedures appear to create an internal conflict. Would it be preferable to give respondents a more routine opportunity to present oral arguments?

During its deliberations on the 1979 Amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act, Congress considered revisions to the Act relating to the enforcement process. As a result of those deliberations, Congress adopted a written briefing process whereby the respondent at both the "reason to believe" stage and at the "probable cause" stage of an enforcement matter would be given an opportunity to present, in writing, any relevant legal or factual material for Commission consideration. That written briefing process and the panoply of procedural safeguards designed to provide respondents with due process under the statute was thought by Congress to be sufficient to give each respondent a full hearing on the merits and allow for a reasoned Commission decision in each case.

If Congress changes its current approach in the statute to incorporate an oral hearing opportunity, the Commission would, of course, take immediate steps to revise its enforcement regulations and procedures accordingly.

At the present time, the Commission has over 326 enforcement matters involving over 1,200 respondents. Adoption of the oral hearing procedure by Congress would have a significant impact on our commitment of resources to the Commission's enforcement program.

5. Can you provide me some explanation of the Commission's decision to spend its time and that of its staff on a trip to watch the Soviet Union's new legislature this past summer? (Particularly in light of the audit backlog and staffing restraints?)

In response to a formal invitation from the Ambassador to the United States from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Yiry V. Dubinin, and the Central Electoral Commission of the Soviet Union, a delegation from the Federal Election Commission visited the Soviet Union on June 4–14, 1989. An affirmative response to the Soviet invitation was not only encouraged, but enthusiastically supported by the United States Department of State.

The purpose of the trip was to exchange information and ideas concerning the electoral process with the Soviet officials, and also included discussions with winning and losing candidates for the Congress of People's Deputies, and several academicians. United States Ambassador Jack Matlack greeted the Commission delegation and provided a formal briefing and the Second Secretary from the American Embassy, Kenneth Hillas, accompanied our delegation and participated in most of our meetings.

With respect to the scheduling of this trip, the Commission was careful to ensure that deliberation of audit matters not be postponed as a result of the Soviet visit. The delegation visiting the Soviet Union did not include any member of the Audit Staff, and all audit fieldwork and report preparation proceeded on schedule in the Commission's absence. Upon the Commission's return, it requested and received a Status Report on Presidential Audits from the Assistant Staff Director for Audit.

Funding for the trip was provided by the government of the Soviet Union and the International Foundation for Electoral Systems headed by F. Clifton White, Chairman of the Board of Directors. In-country expenses were defrayed by the Soviet government and the cost of air travel to the Soviet Union was paid by the International Foundation for Electoral Systems. No portion of the cost of this trip was paid for by the United States Government.

Note: The Commissioners also provided a copy of "Report on the Visit by the Federal Election Commission to the Soviet Union, June 1989" as additional information.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise simply to inform my colleagues that, as of today, Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut for 1,662 days.

RECONCILIATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I just submitted to the Parliamentarian four questions which deal with reconciliation. I have told the Parliamentarian there is no rush. I will come back later for an answer sometime later this afternoon. It might have an impact on how we deal with certain issues in the Finance Committee meeting which is underway at this time.

The first question is: Can the Senate Budget Committee incorporate into the reconciliation bill pursuant to the congressional budget resolution material which was reported after August 4, 1989?

The second question is: Can the Byrd rule, the extraneous rule, be used to attack the House language on capital gains?

The third question is: At what point can a floor amendment on capital gains be added to (A) the Senate reconciliation bill or (B) the House reconciliation bill?

The fourth question is: If there are no recommendations voted out by the Finance Committee on reconciliation, can the committee be brought into compliance through a motion to recommit with instructions?

I indicate to the Parliamentarian I will come back later and maybe get the answers for the RECORD. But they are important questions because we are dealing this afternoon in the Senate Finance Committee with the issue of capital gains and a number of other issues that might be subject to the so-called Byrd rule, which is named after the distinguished Presiding Officer who made a good effort to keep a lot of extraneous material out of reconciliation packages.

In addition, there are, I understand, about 200 extraneous provisions in the House reconciliation bill which is coming to the Senate and we want to know if the Byrd rule will apply to those extraneous provisions.

So, in any event, it is important, and I might say it is important probably for Members on each side. The capital gains reduction is important to the President of the United States. It is not something that surprised anyone in the Congress. Candidate Bush campaigned all across this country saying we should reduce the capital gains tax for good reasons, create jobs, be more competitive, reduce the cost of capital when businesses expand, and it seems to me that no one should be surprised and say we are going to wreck the 1986 tax bill, because the President at the time he was a candidate was speaking about reduction of capital gains.

So it is an issue that we feel very strongly about on the Republican side and I have to believe there is a considerable spirit of bipartisanship when it comes to reduction of the capital gains tax. Maybe there are different approaches, maybe people would address it differently, but it is important. We want to make every effort we can at the earliest time to make certain that we will have a vote on the President's general proposal on capital gains reduction, and we might come together in a bipartisan way on precisely how that measure should be crafted.

Many of us are not enamored with the House-passed temporary 2-year cut in capital gains. We are looking for a more permanent solution, and hopefully we can put that together, if not on a bipartisan basis in the Finance Committee, then perhaps when it comes to the floor if we can offer an amendment on the floor. And that is the $64 question. If we cannot, then we need to find some other way to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate and get it before the Senate.

So I ask the questions in that spirit in an effort to see if there is some way we can resolve any differences that might come up today or later on.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

FISCAL FOLLIES

Mr. RIEGLE. Today, Mr. President, the lead story in the Wall Street Journal on page 1 under the heading of "Fiscal Follies" is entitled "Ever-Growing Deficits Establish the Failure of Gramm-Rudman." The subheadline says, "Accounting Gimmicks Permit Congress To Spend Freely, Cutting Only Projections." And then the follow-on line is, "A Sponsor Wants a 'Divorce.'"

Dropping down into the article:

"I want a divorce from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings," thunders Senator Ernest Hollings, the bill's Democratic sponsor.

Then it drops on down to say "These days, though, he labels the latest budget produced to comply with the law 'pure sham.'"

This article goes on to indicate that the deficits are in fact rising rather than falling. Under the bizarre treatment that we handle the budget numbers under Gramm-Rudman, we use the Society Security surpluses and other trust fund surpluses to make the deficit appear to be better and lower than it actually is.

Many of us who opposed Gramm-Rudman in the beginning were concerned that this very thing would happen. But I think, as time has passed, more and more people, including now Senator HOLLINGS himself who sponsored the legislation, see that it has been so twisted out of shape that it is causing the very things to happen that we were trying to prevent. Therefore, damage is being done to our fiscal picture and strategy because of this law. The law ought to be overhauled and done away with.

If we are going to have some measure to control the deficit, it is going to have to be of completely different type and sort.

I ask unanimous consent that this lead article from today's Wall Street Journal be made a part of the RECORD. I encourage my colleagues to read the article, and all those who read the RECORD, the staff as well, because I think it is probably as solid an assessment of the failure of Gramm-Rudman as any single article that I have seen.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FISCAL FOLLIES

EVER-GROWING DEFICITS ESTABLISH THE FAILURE OF GRAMM-RUDMAN

ACCOUNTING GIMMICKS PERMIT CONGRESS TO SPEND FREELY, CUTTING ONLY PROJECTIONS

A SPONSOR WANTS A "DIVORCE"

(By John E. Yang)

WASHINGTON.—Here's a pop quiz. Under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction law, the federal budget deficit since 1987 has:

(a) decreased

(b) increased

Hint: Remember, this is Washington.

That's right. Under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, the problem has been getting worse instead of better. In fiscal 1987, the deficit totaled $149.7 billion; in fiscal 1989, it grew to an estimated $161.4 billion.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is a flop. Originally designed to cut the federal deficit to zero in 1991, the law has had great success in cutting deficit projections. But it has failed in the last two years to do anything at all for the actual deficit.

A SHAM

"I want a divorce from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings," thunders Sen. Ernest Hollings, the bill's Democratic sponsor. When the law passed in 1985, the stentorian South Carolinian hailed it as ending "the fraud that we have all perpetrated on the American people." These days, though, he labels the latest budget produced to comply with the law "pure sham." Although the fiscal 1990 deficit was supposed to be down to $36 billion, Congress is now busily completing a plan calling for a deficit of $99.7 billion—while its own Congressional Budget Office projects that the real number will be $117.8 billion.

The bill's original approach was simple, and seemingly severe. It set out to eliminate the deficit by imposing limits that shrank every year. It required the government to determine every Oct. 15 whether it would meet that year's deficit target. If not, the law would impose automatic, across-the-board spending cuts.

By complying with the law has turned into little more than a fiscal shell game. "Everybody has learned how to rig it," says Senate Budget Committee Chairman James Sasser of Tennessee. Both Congress and the administration have become masters at coming up with enough accounting gimmicks to achieve the required reductions. By the time the lie becomes evident, the threat of cuts is a fading memory.

SWITCHING YEARS

Just last week, the administration shifted a Pentagon payday to Sept. 29, which is in fiscal 1989, from Oct. 1, the first day of fiscal 1990. In addition, the government advanced some farm price-support payments to the old fiscal year from the new one. The moves made it $4 billion easier to reach the fiscal 1990 target—but, of course, raised fiscal 1989's deficit by precisely the same amount.

Further, the dreaded across-the-board cuts are turning out to be not so dreaded after all. Congress is all but certain to miss this year's deadline; its effort to put into place the deficit-reduction plan worked out with the Bush administration has become painfully entangled in issues ranging from capital-gains taxes to child care. Yet most people now expect cuts to be quickly rescinded once Congress and the administration reach agreement on the various issues.

Not only has Gramm-Rudman failed to solve the deficit problem, it has created a number of other ones. The drive to meet its targets has become paramount and often dictates policy, rewarding gimmickry and out-and-out fiscal deceit. Its year-to-year focus has also created a short-term, help-me-make-it-through-the-fiscal-night mindset among congressional and administration budget writers. The result is a string of one-time spending reductions, but little permanent policy savings.

"It's a well-intentioned experiment that failed," says Alice Rivlin, a former Congressional Budget Office director who is now a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution. "It is time to recognize the mistake before more damage is done."

Many lawmakers agree, and some are drawing up plans to work over the law when the debt ceiling is raised later this month. The law has already been weakened once, stretching the balanced-budget goal out to 1993 from 1991. Now, under the guise of "truth in budgeting," some want to stretch out its targets even further. A co-author, Texas Republican Sen. Phil Gramm, suggests extending the law through the end of the century. And House Ways and Means Committee staffers are toying with the idea of coupling an automatic tax increase to the automatic spending cuts.

Backers of the law point to some benefits from it. Since it went into effect, the rate of growth of federal spending has slowed. And deficit did decline the first few years under the law, although they have increased again the past two years. When the bill was enacted, the federal budget deficit appeared headed for the $300 billion mark and beyond, and the law served to focus attention on the problem.

But even some of the law's protectors offer little more than faint praise. "As near as I can see, it is the only element of discipline left in the system," says Minnesota Rep. Bill Fenzel, the senior GOP member of the House Budget Committee. "It may not be a very good one, but I certainly would be reluctant to make changes in it."

The need to meet the law's projected deficit targets is one of the driving forces in Congress behind the current push to lower the rate at which capital gains are taxed. According to Congress's Joint Committee on Taxation, cutting the rate would in the short run encourage so many people to sell off appreciated holdings that government revenues would rise $2.9 billion in the first year and a total of $9.4 billion over three years.

After that, though, the committee projects the capital-gains change would not cost the government more in the next two years—$10.9 billion—than it had raised in the previous three. And those losses would come just as Gramm-Rudman requires the deficit to be brought to zero.

Gramm-Rudman also puts a premium on finding big, one-time savings gimmicks. Congress and the administration have agreed to take the U.S. Postal Service operating losses out of the budget, "saving" $1.7 billion from next year's projected deficit. (Aides joke that once the Postal Service generates a surplus again, they'll put it back in the budget.)

Nor has the law done much to deter lawmakers from spending; instead, it has simply led many to change tactics. The law's focus is on outlays—that is, the money the government actually spends. So lawmakers, eager to please the folks back home, are authorizing more and more projects that will be costly down the road. The effect is like making a down payment on a balloon mortgage that will require huge, escalating payments in the future.

Democrats complain that this problem is exacerbated by President Bush's penchant for announcing popular new programs—a mission to Mars, a war on drugs, efforts to curb acid rain—without saying how to pay for them. That places lawmakers in the awkward position of not wanting to kill the projects but lacking the immediate resources to pay for them.

CART BEFORE HORSE?

Other policy is written with an eye on immediate budgetary impact instead of other, potentially more serious consequences. The Senate, for instance, voted last month to raise the ceiling on Federal Housing Administration-insured mortgages for single-family homes. The hoped-for result is to raise $106 million next year by stimulating 43,500 new loans; the money would help finance the space-station program. Administration officials warn, though, that an unintended consequence could be to raise greatly the risk exposure of the insurance fund, whose losses already stand at $6.9 billion.

"I wonder if we are making worse law in meeting targets," says New Mexico Sen. Pete Domenici, the senior Republican on the Budget Committee and a defender of Gramm-Rudman. "It is a glaring example of policy driven by budget targets."

Another example is the budget treatment of the $166 billion savings-and-loan bailout. The bulk of the on-budget treatment comes in the last fiscal year, when adding to the deficit didn't trigger any cuts. In future years, the scheme will actually reduce the deficit because funds will flow from a government-sponsored borrowing enterprise into the Treasury, distorting the budget's representation of government borrowing and spending.

THE MAGIC OF PROJECTION

That maneuver illustrates another Gramm-Rudman loophole exploited by lawmakers and administration officials alike. All that matters in the law are projections of the deficit in the coming fiscal year. Once the White House Office of Management and Budget certifies, when the spending year is just 15 days old, that the deficit 350 days hence will meet the law's target, the threat of automatic spending cuts vanishes. Congress and the administration then are free to spend more.

OMB Director Richard Darman calls this "a giant loophole . . . the biggest single problem that's got to be corrected." But that hasn't stopped the administration from taking advantage of it from time to time.

The frustration over Gramm-Rudman is likely to bubble to the surface late this month during the debt-ceiling debate. Staffs for both House and Senate Democrats and Republicans are quietly drafting possible legislation, some of which would go so far as to repeal the law. But that isn't likely to happen, if only because keeping some semblance of the law provides political cover for lawmakers.

More likely to be considered are efforts to change the way government trust funds, including Social Security, are accounted for in the budget process. Currently, Social Security surpluses are counted to reduce the deficit and are invested in Treasury notes, thus helping to finance the deficit. Sen. Gramm proposes separating Social Security from the federal budget in 1993 and creating a panel to manage its investments.

Since such a move would create a budget deficit of $105 billion instead of the zero his namesake law now calls for, Mr. Gramm would extend Gramm-Rudman through fiscal 1999. He hopes his plan will act as a check on Congress's spending through the end of the century. But other lawmakers, noting how ineffective the law has been in curbing the deficit and how many other problems it has created, don't think his scheme will accomplish much.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

CAPITOL HILL SECURITY

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, recently I was reading an article in the Roll Call newspaper which is an organ that specializes in news relating to the Congress and matters of the Hill. I read an article with some rather mixed feelings. I was a little disturbed to read that there has been some opposition developed since the establishment of the increased security procedures throughout the Capitol complex, including the House and Senate office buildings.

Mr. President, frankly, I have very little patience for the attitude that has been demonstrated in some of the circumstances as reported. There has been the feeling among some staff members, as I understand, and even some Members of Congress that passing through security devices or being screened for security purposes is beneath their dignity. To me this is a further demonstration of the pompous and egocentered atmosphere and culture which is so often attendant to the political life of our country.

I might say that during my tenure in the Senate two bombs have been exploded in the Capitol building, and fortunately no one was injured. But it could have had serious injuries. These were very real events to those of us who lived through them. We walked through the dust and litter created out of the walls and halls which we had traversed the day before.

In the Republican cloakroom there were long spears of glass that had embedded themselves in the couches in our Republican cloakroom. Had we been in session, as at one point we had expected to be on a Monday night, I am sure more Republican Senators would have been in there watching the Monday night football game than perhaps here on the floor, and that would certainly have been in the target area when that bomb went off and those spears of glass were flying through that cloakroom.

All too clearly we saw the vulnerability that all those in the Capitol—Members of Congress, staff members, tourists, and employees—face day to day.

Mr. President, the Senate and the House leadership in conjunction with the Capitol Police Force have gone about developing the security system that is as unobtrusive as possible. We did not want to develop a system that was so secure that it gave the impression that the public was not welcome to this great center of our democracy.

The entrances to the Capitol and the related buildings are manned by courteous and helpful men and women who are part of our Hill family, part of the congressional family. I really hope all of us understand that we just could not function as Senators without these outstanding and dedicated public servants who work here in the building. Those who make their lives difficult by attempting to skirt the security procedures should be ashamed.

It would take just one casualty to move those same individuals to call for the resignations of those who were in charge. That first casualty is one we never want to have. I applaud our leadership and the Capitol Police Force for the work they are doing to protect all of us and to enable us to go about the work of representing the people of the United States with a sense of safety, and a sense of security.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article, and to again express my concern for attitudes that are not becoming to the purpose for which this security system was set, and frankly I do not think are becoming to a democratic institution.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE STAFFERS UNHAPPY OVER BEING TREATED LIKE TOURISTS AS ELECTRONIC SCREENING BEGINS

(By Timothy J. Burger)

For the first time Tuesday, staffers entering Senate office buildings were subjected to the same screening procedures as tourists, and some aides weren't happy at all about the change.

"I tell you, I think it's ridiculous," said one Senate staffer who asked that his name not be used.

"This is overkill," added another.

Said Pamela Huey, deputy press secretary to Sen. Paul Simon (D-Ill): "It's frustrating, after you're used to just walking in."

Still, most staffers took the screening in stride.

"I think it's fine," said John Moseman, AA to Sen. Frank Murkowski (R-Alaska). "I've always been reasonably amused that you could sort of walk in with anything."

Senate staffers are now required to pass through "Weapons Detector Portals," or magnetometers, similar to those at airports. In addition, packages or anything else they're carrying is X-rayed.

Screening stations have been set up at all entrances to Senate office buildings, including those from parking lots. There are also checkpoints for those passing from the House to the Senate side of the Capitol.

Members are exempt from screening.

The House leadership is expected to introduce procedures similar to those in the Senate soon. And, of course, House staffers entering Senate buildings are screened.

Although staffers' opinions on the new procedures varied, they were strong.

Lori Fields, assistant special counsel to the House on impeachment, refused to go through the portals on Tuesday. She said she was pregnant, and she was concerned the system might harm her unborn child.

She was instead screened with a handheld metal-detector.

Several staffers entering the Hart building from the C Street, NE, entrance, complained of delays. During a peak period on Tuesday morning, a line of 15 persons was waiting to get through the door.

"First, there was no notice," said a top Senate aide. "There was no explanation of the procedure. It's slow as mud."

Capitol Police officer Dan Nichols, the department spokesman, said yesterday that Chief Frank Kerrigan sent a letter to all Senate offices and support service personnel advising staff of the new procedures.

"People may have been on vacation or whatever," but they were warned in the Sept. 7 letter, Nichols said.

Another Senate aide said staffers were lined up in the rain outside a Dirksen building C Street entrance, where screening equipment is located closer to the door than in Hart.

Nichols said such delays would disappear as both officers and staffers become more accustomed to the new procedures. Several staffers said they were glad to see security increased.

"I think it's a very good idea . . . with as much garbage as is going on on Capitol Hill," said Cara Widman, LC to Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah).

On several occasions, officers had to tell surprised staffers, who held out their IDs and tried to walk around as they had always done, to go through the security portals.

And at one Senate entrance, an officer apparently prepared to challenge all unfamiliar faces, approached a man walking in—only to be told: "I'm Congressman Tallon" (Democratic Rep. Robin Tallon of South Carolina).

The new requirements are part of a Whips' Security Enhancement Proposal, which calls for similar measures on the House side and for construction of a security perimeter hedge around the East Front. (Roll Call, Aug. 14-20.)

Speaker Tom Foley (D-Wash) said yesterday that it is uncertain exactly when the House will begin screening staffers.

Mr. HATFIELD. I think sometimes self-importance is our worst enemy, as we seek to maintain a balance in the understanding of our duties. I want to also say in my remarks that I make great exception to the young lady who, being pregnant, was questioning about going through the system, and I certainly understand that, and, of course, the police understand that. Special arrangements can be made for those exceptional cases, and there may be other exceptional cases. But from talking to these policemen and those who are watching after our well-being, I am appalled, Mr. President, at some of the abuse that they have been put to by this sort of attitude that, well, you ought to recognize me, I am an important person around here, and I come and go through these doors enough for you to know who I am.

Let us remind ourselves, Mr. President, that the shooting at the State Department was by an employee of the State Department who had been fired, but the guard on the gate was unacquainted with that particular procedure that had occurred very recently. So there are those reasons that should incorporate all of us.

I have now made a habit, Mr. President, of deliberately walking through those stations just to try to set an example for my staff, that no one on my staff is above it. No one is too dignified and too important not to comply with these simple procedures that have been created by our leadership for our own protection.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

S. 1338, COMMITTEE REPORT—MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on September 21, the Judiciary Committee voted to report S. 1338, the Flag Protection Act of 1989. Since the committee report has only just become available and we will likely consider this bill later this week, I would like to make sure that my colleagues have an opportunity to consider carefully some of the arguments against this statutory approach to protecting the flag. I believe a constitutional amendment is necessary to protect the flag. I therefore ask unanimous consent that a copy of the minority views of Senator GRASSLEY and myself be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the views were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS OF SENATOR ORRIN G. HATCH AND CHARLES E. GRASSLEY

WHY WE SHOULD PROTECT THE FLAG

The American people revere the flag as a unique symbol of our country and of the freedom we enjoy as Americans. It is the one symbol that unites a very diverse people in a way nothing else can. Despite our differences of party, politics, philosophy, religion, ethnic background, economic status, social status, or geographic region, the flag forms a unique, common bond among us.

Justice Stevens, dissenting in Texas v. Johnson, aptly stated:

"A country's flag is a symbol of more than nationhood and national unity. It also signifies the ideas that characterize the society that has chosen that emblem as well as the special history that has animated the growth and power of those ideas. * * *

"[The American flag] * * * is a symbol of freedom, of equal opportunity, of religious tolerance, and of goodwill for other peoples who share our aspirations. * * * " Slip op. at 1,2 (Stevens, J. dissenting).

Chief Justice Rehnquist has written,

"The significance of the flag, and the deep emotional feelings it arouses in a large part of our citizenry, cannot be fully expressed in the two dimensions of a lawyer's brief or of a judicial opinion." Smith v. Goguen, 415 U.S. 566 at 602 (1974) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

The Chief Justice then noted:

"* * * if the government may create private proprietary interests in written work and in musical and theatrical performances by virtue of copyright laws, I see no reason why it may not * * * create a similar governmental interest in the flag by prohibiting even those who have purchased the physical object from impairing its physical integrity. For what they have purchased is not merely cloth dyed red, white, and blue, but also the one visibl manifestation of two hundred years of nationhood * * * " Id. at 602-603.

Justice White has written:

"One need not explain fully a phenomenon to recognize its existence and in this case to concede that the flag is an important symbol of nationhood and unity, created by the Nation and endowed with certain attributes. * * * " Id. at 587 (White, J., concurring).

PROTECTING THE FLAG DOES NOT THREATEN THE FIRST AMENDMENT

In our view, it cannot be seriously argued that the protection of the flag from physical desecration impairs the first amendment's principle of freedom of speech. This freedom has never been deemed absolute. Libel is actionable, even under the first amendment. Obscenity is not protected under the first amendment. Nor are "fighting words", designed to provoke violent reactions by an audience, protected. Reasonable time, place and manner limits may be constitutionally placed on speech. Hence, a person cannot blare out his or her political views at two o'clock in the morning in a residential neighborhood and claim first amendment protection.

Protecting the flag from physical desecration does not prevent a single idea or thought from being expressed. It does not interfere with the numerous ways of conveying an idea—through speech, use of placards, leaflets, newspapers, and more. It merely prevents conduct with respect to one object, and one object, our flag. We can withdraw that one unique object from physical desecration without limiting freedom of speech. Indeed, for many years, a Federal statute and 48 State statutes did protect the flag. Can anyone identify actual harm to the first amendment during this time?

We note that other ardent proponents of the first amendment have expressed similar views. In Street v. New York, 394 U.S. 576 (1969), the defendant burned a flag while uttering a political protest. The Court overturned his conviction since the defendant might have been convicted solely because of his words. The Court reserved judgment on whether a conviction for flag burning itself could withstand constitutional scrutiny. Id. at 581. Chief Justice Warren dissented:

"I believe that the States and the Federal Government do have the power to protect the flag from acts of desecration and disgrace * * * " Id. at 605 (Warren, C.J., dissenting).

Justice Black—generally regarded as a first amendment "absolutist"—also dissented and stated:

"It passes my belief that anything in the Federal Constitution bars a State from making the deliberate burning of the American flag an offense." Id. at 610 (Black, J., dissenting).

Justice Fortas agreed with Chief Justice Warren and Justice Black:

"[T]he states and the Federal Government have the power to protect the flag from acts of desecration committed in public. * * * [T]he flag is a special kind of personality. Its use is traditionally and universally subject to special rules and regulations. * * * A person may "own" a flag, but ownership is subject to special burdens and responsibilities. A flag may be property, in a sense; but it is property burdened with peculiar obligations and restrictions. Certainly * * * these special conditions are not per se arbitrary or beyond governmental power under our Constitution." Id. at 615-617 (Fortas, J., dissenting).

Moreover, there is no slippery slope here—because there is simply nothing else like our flag. We are seeking no protection for any other symbol.

A STATUTORY RESPONSE TO "TEXAS AGAINST JOHNSON" IS INADEQUATE

We have concluded that a constitutional amendment is absolutely necessary to ensure with certainty the validity of any statute banning flag desecration. We believe it is futile to try to overturn this Supreme Court interpretation of the Constitution by a statute. The Constitution provides, in article V, for the exclusive means of its amendment. The article V amendment process is an organic, fundamental part of the Constitution and should not be evaded.

We believe that a facially neutral statute, such as S. 1338, which bans all knowing mutilation, defacement, trampling, or burning of the flag undertaken for any purpose, including for the purpose of ceremoniously disposing of a worn or dirty flag, is unlikely to survive constitutional scrutiny.

Even such a facially neutral statute will be struck down when applied to a person who desecrates the flag as part of a political expression, after Texas v. Johnson. Why? Because the Supreme Court declared in that case that the Government's asserted interest in preserving the flag as a symbol of nationhood and national unity is insufficient to overcome a person's so-called right to burn the flag as part of expressive conduct. Indeed, it cannot be denied that the principal if not the only purpose in enacting a facially neutral statute is to prohibit expressive conduct that physically desecrates the flag [1] No one claims that we are interested in protecting the material, the thread, and the dye in the flag. We protect the flag as a symbol, including against those who would desecrate the flag as part of a political expression, that approach will fall after Texas v. Johnson.

As William Barr, Assistant Attorney General for Legal Counsel, testified, "it cannot be seriously maintained that a statute aimed at protecting the Flag would be constitutional." The unconstitutionality of any statute which attempts to protect all forms of flag destruction has been predicted by Justice Brennan, who wrote that any statute "that simply outlawed any public burning or mutilation of the Flag, regardless of the expressive intent or nonintent of the actor," would be "invalid for the reasons stated in my discussion of Spence [v. Washington, 418 U.S. 405 (1974)]." Kime v. United States, 459 U.S. 949, 955 n.7 (1982) (Brennan, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original).[2]

[1] The argument of the committee that S. 1338 is constitutionally sound because phrased in neutral language that does not affect free speech is misplaced. Irrespective of the language chosen, the principal purpose of this bill, like the pending constitutional amendment, is to change the result of the Johnson case. The Supreme Court frequently examines the legislative history of a statute. See, e.g., Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S.C. 38 (1985). The legislative history of this law, if it is enacted, will reveal overwhelming evidence that it was designed to prevent the expression of an idea through flag desecration—that is an unconstitutional purpose under the Johnson decision. Indeed, Justice Brennan has written that: [T]he only basis for a governmental interest (if any) in protecting the flag is precisely the fact that the flag has substantive meaning as a political symbol. Thus, assuming that there is a legitimate interest at stake, it can hardly be said to be one divorced from political expression. Kime v. United States, 459, 953 (198) (Brennan, J., dissenting).

[2] The committee suggests that Texas v. Johnson does not govern the case of a conviction for flag burning undertaken in violation of a law banning any person from making an open fire in a public place because such a ban is content-neutral. Report, page 9, footnote 5. The committee suggests that, similarly, the constitutionality of a content-neutral flag protection statute is not governed by Texas v. Johnson. Report, page 9, text at note 5. We believe the analogy, however, is irrelevant. The constitutionality of the former prohibition does not tell us much, if anything, about the constitutionality of the latter prohibition. S. 1338, is not national prohibition on making an open fire in a public place; it is a prohibition of all specified conduct with respect to the flag alone, in order to preserve its role as a national symbol.

Moreover, we do not believe a neutral, blanket statute reaching all physical desecration of the flag, such as S. 1338, is appropriate even if it held constitutional. We think a blanket statute sweeps too far. There are legitimate reasons to dispose of worn or dirty flags in a way that would run afoul of such a statute. Under this statute, a veteran or any other American who reverently wishes to dispose of a worn or dirty flag by burning it would be subject to a $1,000 fine or 1 year imprisonment or both.[3] Yet, any exception we write into a statute further undermines its constitutionality under Texas v. Johnson. The Court there noted that if a State were to forbid "flag-burning wherever it is likely to endanger the flag's symbolic role, but allow it wherever burning a flag promotes that role—as where, for example, a person ceremoniously burns a dirty flag—we would be saying that when it comes to impairing the flag's physical integrity, the flag itself may be used as a symbol—as a substitute for the written or spoken word * * *—only in one direction." Slip opinion at 19.

This, the Court indicated, is impermissible.[4] While the Court did not make this remark in the context of an otherwise blanket ban on flag desecration, we are deeply concerned that such a rationale would be used to invalidate just such a blanket statute.

Indeed, this constitutional flaw is present in H.R. 2978, the House-passed flag statute, which is also pending in the Senate. Its ban on flag desecration includes an exception for "any conduct consisting of the disposal of a flag when it has become worn or soiled."

Further, S. 1338 and H.R. 2978 reach private conduct, such as that undertaken in the home. It is the public casting of contempt on the flag, however, whether to make a political point or no point at all, which we believe should be outlawed. Thus, the present Federal statute is the appropriate approach to outlawing flag burning:

Whoever knowingly casts contempt upon any flag of the United States by publicly mutilating, defacing, defiling, burning, or trampling upon it shall be fined not more than $1000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. 18 U.S.C. Section 700(a).

Accordingly, we have no need of passing a new federal statute, but only to assure the constitutionality of the current one, which has been on the books for over 20 years.

A constitutional amendment is the safest, surest, and most permanent way of achieving the protection of the flag that the supporters of a statute-only approach also claim they favor.[5] It is difficult to square their opposition to an amendment on their asserted grounds that it somehow tampers with the first amendment with their own statutory approach: how is a statute which prohibits flag desecration in all or some instances not a threat to first amendment principles, while a constitutional amendment achieving the same thing is such a threat? Indeed, S. 1338 and H.R. 2978 ban more conduct than the Federal statute now on the books, 18 U.S.C. 700. As mentioned earlier, the current Federal law bans mutilation, burning, and so forth, of the flag, in public, and when done knowingly to cast contempt on the flag. S 1338 and H.R. 2978 prohibit all knowing mutilation and burning and so on, whether contemptuous or not, and whether in public or in private. The one exception is in H.R. 2978, for conduct disposing of a worn or dirty flag.

We note that the Federal statute has not yet been struck down by the Court. Of course, it is not presently enforceable. If we enact a constitutional amendment, this statute will already be on the books. Thus, there will be no gap in protection of the flag between the effective date of an amendment and the enactment of a new statute. Neither S. 1338 nor H.R. 2978 are needed; what is needed is a constitutional amendment legitimizing the statute we now have.

We also raise other serious concerns about H.R. 2978. It creates expedited review in the Supreme Court.

If the question of the constitutionality [of the statute] is properly presented in the case in [federal] District Court, the court shall, if the Supreme Court . . . has not previously ruled on that question, immediately certify that question to the Supreme Court.

We question whether we should provide this kind of expedited mechanism. The committee heard no testimony on it. What does "properly presented" mean? When the issue is pled? Before or after discovery is completed? What kind of "binding instructions" are we talking about authorizing the Supreme Court to give?

And why does H.R. 2978 give the two Houses a right to intervene as a party to defend the constitutionality of the bill? That task is for the executive branch. We believe we ought to think long and hard before we grant Congress the right to intervene as a party, even for limited purposes, in cases involving legislation we enact. Certainly the committee has not reviewed this in the detail it merits. Thus, we find the House bill even less acceptable than S. 1338.

S.J. RES. 180 IS A SUITABLE RESPONSE

S.J. Res. 180 provides for the following amendment to the Constitution: "The Congress shall have power to prohibit the physical desecration of the Flag of the United States." We believe adoption of this amendment fulfills its intent to overturn the Texas v. Johnson decision and restore the power to Congress and the States to prohibit flag desecration which we believe they always had. In Johnson, the Court said it could not pick and choose which symbols were so unique as to warrant protection:

There is, moreover, no indication—either in the text of the Constitution or in our cases interpreting it—that a separate juridical category exists for the American Flag alone.

This amendment establishes just such a category in the Constitution's text.

There was a brief criticism in the committee debate that this amendment would give Congress and the States the power to outlaw the use of the flag at political conventions, parades, or outlaw ownership of the flag by members of the Communist Party or Socialist Party. This criticism, however, finds no basis in the language of the amendment or the intentions of its sponsors. S.J. Res. 180 creates no slippery slope down which any democratic guarantee will slide. Rather, it merely authorizes States and Congress to prohibit the "physical desecration" of the flag (emphasis supplied). There is no plausible way of reading this term to include prohibiting the mere display or carrying of the flag at any gathering, including political conventions and parades. Nor can the language possibly be read to authorize prohibiting ownership or display of a flag by any individual or member of any group. This concern was not raised by a single witness, including the most severe critics of an amendment, testifying at the four hearings held on this matter.

We believe, in fact, it is likely that the overwhelming majority of states will leave their current laws in place if this amendment is enacted.

In sum, we believe an amendment is the only constitutionally sound approach to restore the power of Congress and the States to protect the flag from desecration.

DRUG REIGN AT END

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, the news reports about Panama indicate that the reign of the drug dealing boss of that country, Manuel Noriega, may be at an end. This is welcome news if it is, indeed, true, and I devoutly hope it is so.

I understand that those who have carried out this coup have announced they are willing to hold free elections with representatives of the Organiza-

---

[3] Apparently recognizing the unsoundness of such a result, the committee seeks to avoid this plain meaning of S. 1338 in a footnote in its report. Report, page 4, footnote 2. The majority suggests that disposal of a worn or soiled flag by burning it is not prohibited by S. 1338 because "[s]uch a flag is no longer a fitting emblem for display" and the Government's "interest in protecting its physical integrity no longer applies." This interpretive gloss clashes directly with the language of S. 1338. S. 1338 punishes the knowing mutilation, defacement, burning, maintaining on the ground, or trampling of the flag—without more. It establishes no exception for "a flag [which] is no longer a fitting emblem for display." The forthright way of excluding disposal of a worn or soiled flag from the strictures of the statute is to include a provision to that effect in the statute itself. Indeed, H.R. 2978, the House-passed flag statute, contains such a provision. Moreover, the definition of the term "flag of the United States" contained in the statute amended by S. 1338 does not turn on whether the flag is "a fitting emblem for display." 18 U.S.C. section 700(b).

[4] Ironically, if the committee's strained interpretation that S. 1338 somehow contains a similar, implicit exception is accepted by the courts, it, too, would lose even the veneer of content-neutrality.

[5] The committee, in defending the constitutionality of S. 1338, seeks to divine the likely vote of Justice Blackmun. Some commentators believe Justice Blackmun, who voted in the Texas v. Johnson majority, will vote to uphold a blanket ban on all flag descration. This prediction is based on his dissent in Smith v. Goguen, 415 U.S. 566 (1974). There, the Supreme Court voided the arrest of a person convicted under a Massachusetts law which banned the public mutilation or contemptuous treatment of the flag. The person in question had a version of the flag sewn to the seat of his pants. The Court ruled the person was denied due process because the law was too vague in the use of the phrase "treats contemptuously." The Smith v. Goguen case did not involve flag abuse which was part of expressive conduct—the Court noted that there was no indication the contemptuous treatment of the flag was part of a political demonstration.

In his dissent, Justice Blackmun stressed that he believed the State court had "limited the scope of the statute to protecting the physical integrity of the flag." 415 U.S. at 591. He believes the respondent had been punished "for harming the physical integrity of the flag by wearing it affixed to the seat of his pants." Id. But he also made clear that he accepted the state court's determination that the respondent's "punishment was not for speech—a communicative element." At best, we think Justice Blackmun's vote on the constitutionality of a blanket flag statute applied in a case where the desecration was part of a political expression is doubtful.

tion of American States as witnesses. This is to be applauded.

General Noriega has been deeply implicated in the flow of illegal drugs to this country from Colombia and elsewhere. According to evidence gathered by the United States, he has personally profited by many millions of dollars by letting Panama be used as a transit point for drugs and Panamanian banks be used to launder the massive, obscene profits that the drug trade produces. No one will be sorry to see him go except those who are themselves implicated and involved in these disgraceful activities.

I believe I speak for all Americans when I say I hope that today's events will make it possible for Panamanian-American relations to return to the sound basis that has characterized those relations for so many years. Our two countries have had a unique relationship founded in shared interests. We have in the past been close friends, and I look forward to seeing that friendship reestablished.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PRESIDENT'S 1989 NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order previously entered, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 1711. The clerk will report the bill.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1711) to implement the President's 1989 national drug control strategy.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the will of the Senate?

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL].

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, today we will consider S. 1711, which is part of the President's drug strategy.

It has been less than 1 month since President Bush announced his vision of a national plan to fight drugs. In 1 month, the Senate has enacted a series of comprehensive and bold initiatives. I find that remarkable and encouraging, Mr. President, 1 month—which proves we can take swift action when the situation demands it.

As we near the end of our legislating on this problem—at least for now—it might be worthwhile to reflect on what we've accomplished. In the achievements column is the 65-percent increase in antidrug spending. That is no small thing, although the problem still demands an even greater increase.

Another achievement—one of which I am particularly proud—is the Senate's allocation of $50 million to help addicted pregnant women and their infants. Too often, we listen to vocal constituencies and overlook the children. I think that is now changed. We are doing not only the compassionate thing, but something that is in our self-interest. These efforts represent an investment in our most precious commodity—the next generations.

But we should also be very clearheaded about what still needs to be done. This afternoon, I hope we will see amendments to expand alcohol and drug treatment programs. This is a must. In Milwaukee alone, 1,000 people have their names on waiting lists for treatment. At a field hearing I conducted in Milwaukee, I heard from a recovered addict named Michael Vann. He now runs a very successful rehabilitation program for young people. And he testified that treatment made all the difference in his life, turning him from a drug pusher into a healer. If Michael Vann can be helped, so can thousands of others.

I also hope we address the problem of drugs in rural America. In 1988, drug arrests in rural counties increased twice as fast as they did in cities the year before. Just this weekend, participants at a conference in Wisconsin stated that every community—small and large—has been infected by drug or alcohol abuse. The rural problem is not as visible as the urban crisis because it is less violent. It requires our attention all the same.

But most of all, I believe we need to work harder to empower local communities. I am afraid that most of our initiatives reflect a top-down, Washington-based approach. By contrast, mobilized communities devise targeted and lasting solutions. Washington can help, but local coalitions are really the ones who will solve this crisis. We should encourage grassroots action by parents, teachers, police, unions, business leaders, the clergy, and neighborhood activists. I hope to return this afternoon with a mechanism to bring about such action.

Finally, Mr. President, let me address the bill offered by the distinguished minority leader, on behalf of the President. Under his measure, States would not receive anticrime funds unless they implemented drug testing programs for certain arrested persons and convicted offenders. Drug testing is sometimes appropriate, and it seems to be a good idea for prisoners. Still, I have some concerns about this plan.

First of all, this bill could cost the States millions—the same millions that could be spent on treatment, prevention, or local law enforcement. A simple drug test costs between $17 and $25. Confirming a positive test requires another $50 to $75 per sample. In other words, each verified test could cost $100. If a State like Wisconsin has to drug test 500 people per week, that would cost $50,000 a week—or $2½ million every year. That is almost half of what my State will receive for State and local law enforcement.

I am also concerned that this measure would vest the Attorney General with a vast amount of undefined discretion. For example, he would determine who should be tested; what they should be tested for; how often they should be tested; and what a test result will mean for the subject. But should not the States decide these matters? The situation in Utah requires a different response than what is needed in New York. Or—if not the States—should not Congress delineate the contours of any drug testing?

These are my concerns, Mr. President. I am confident that we can strengthen this measure as the day proceeds, and I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin raises a point of no quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN].

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, last evening the distinguished Republican leader introduced a bill to implement the President's 1989 national drug control strategy, and we will be debating this matter today, into the evening, I do not doubt, and tomorrow.

I would like to make a prefatory remark about that strategy, because it is a singular fact that Congress set out the outline of this strategy 1 year ago. More specifically, it was done initially in this Chamber and quite specifically it was done at the behest of the then majority leader, the present distinguished President pro tempore, whom I have the honor to address at this moment.

The President will recall that it was on May 17, 1988, that he appointed a working group. He asked that it be chaired by the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] and by the Senator from New York.

In this calculation we tried to deal with the problem. We faced then as we face now an ongoing endemic problem in the United States of drug use and abuse, which goes back a century to the development of these drugs. It goes back further than that, Mr. President. In 1805 morphine—from the Greek Morpheus, the god of dreams—was first isolated from opium; subsequently, the hypodermic needle was invented and the first mass use as a medication, basically as a suppressant, a pain-killer, was administered in the Civil War. Following the war there was widespread addiction to morphine among soldiers. Indeed, it was known as the soldiers' disease.

This was followed in the 1880's by the development of heroin and cocaine. Both were products of German laboratories. The Bayer Aspirin people developed and tested the drug and their employees said that it made them feel heroic, hence heroin. Cocaine was, in the same way, a derivative of the coca leaf. Both drugs suddenly appeared in the West and specifically in the United States to people who had no previous cultural experience with them.

The other day, speaking of this on the floor of the Senate, a distinguished Member of this body observed that we had had 5,000 years of experience with alcohol. I offered the thought that well, yes, 5,000 years of beer and wine; yet only 250 years' experience with distilled alcohol.

The technique, which was invented in the Renaissance in Italy, and industrialized with the subsequent agricultural surpluses of the 19th century, reached its glory in the gin lanes in London, and the distribution to laborers of Monongahela whiskey on the Erie Canal, which was served a quart a day. Four-ounce portions were taken beginning at 6 o'clock in the morning. Nobody really knew it was not that good for you at 6 o'clock in the morning.

We have had a 100-year experience with the particular drugs cocaine and heroin. But, Mr. President, we have had only 6 years of experience with crack cocaine—6. And that is what the strategy developed under the guidance of and with consultations with the distinguished President pro tempore.

We said we were going to try to deal with the problem of supply since most of these substances come from outside the country, and we have dealt with that. In one way or another we have been dealing with it for a century—well, at least since 1914 when the prohibition was first put in place—and with very limited effect.

The real event has been the cycle of demand, which has gone up and gone down.

In the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 we set up a national director to implement our strategy. We said, divide your efforts between demand and supply, but demand must come first. We gave him two deputies, one for demand reduction and one for supply reduction. Demand came first. As a matter of fact, the deputy for demand reduction is a very distinguished research physician, Dr. Herbert Kleber from the Yale Medical School, who advised us when we were preparing for this legislation.

Mr. President, in that legislation, we wrote into it a national mandate which never before appeared in legislation—and I sometimes think we never will recognize this mandate which appeared in it—which is to say, treatment on request.

Mr. President, I wrote those words. I wish now I said treatment on application. The standard formulation, however, is treatment on demand. I do not know that drug-dependent persons are in a position to demand anything; but request, yes. It is there. It is in the statute. It is one of the goals of the program.

Last year, I came to this floor on at least three occasions to make the point that while we were calling for treatment on request, there was now no treatment for crack cocaine. It does not exist. It is an epidemic that appeared suddenly in the Bahamas in 1983.

The psychiatrists recognized it immediately. The Bahamas are a peaceable kingdom, heaven knows. Suddenly, though, in 1983, one psychiatric facility on the island, at a place called Sandilands, persons began arriving, seriously disturbed—mad men who had cut off the heads of their dogs with machetes, drank their blood and killed their neighbor and then would show up for help. The question was asked: "What have you been doing up to now? Up to now you have been a perfectly peaceable citizen of the island not bothering anybody, living a normal, pleasant life. What happened to you?" Response, "I started taking this stuff." And what was this "stuff"? Freebase cocaine, smokeable cocaine. The human species had had no experience with it, nor with its devastation.

In 1985, Dr. Allen, who was associated with that Bahamian clinic, tried to warn us. He said an epidemic is heading your way as clearly as he might have said Hurricane Hugo is heading your way.

He was quoted in a small item that appeared in the Atlanta Journal on December 31, 1985:

> A highly addictive practice of smoking cocaine rocks has swept this chain of islands off the coast of Florida. * * * In a country of 230,000 people, the number of cocaine users treated at mental health clinics has zoomed from zero in 1982 to 209 in 1984, according to Dr. David Allen, a Harvard-trained psychiatrist who heads the National Drug Council.

He went on to say:

> What we have is the world's first freebasing epidemic which could be preceding an epidemic of the industrialized United States. Anywhere there is readily available high quality cocaine there is this potential.

There you are.

A short while later, Dr. Allen and five associates published a paper in the Lancet, which is a prestigious British medical journal. It notes that freebase cocaine use is an epidemic in the Bahamas—and a new health hazard appearing in the world.

Now where am I taking the Senate this morning, Mr. President? Very simply it is to this: We have a public health emergency, an epidemic in this country. We recognized it in our statute last year and we provided for its treatment.

How do the poor, the indigent in our country get treatment in medical emergencies or protracted medical difficulties? I believe the answer is through the Medicaid Program that began in 1965 as an adjunct to Medicare. Who is eligible for Medicaid? The same persons who are eligible for public assistance under the Social Security Act of various titles—Aid to Families With Dependent Children, and the Supplemental Security Income Program for the aged, blind, and the disabled.

And what can they be treated for if they come to a hospital, if they are an indigent person and if they have been using heroin and they need treatment? The hospital will take them in and usually provide them with a methadone treatment, which is a pharmacological treatment. It is medicine—you and I, Mr. President, call it medicine—developed as a treatment for heroin addiction by Dr. Vincent Dole in the early 1960's. Methadone is a synthetic drug developed by the Germans in World War II when they ran out of morphine because they had no access to the natural sources of morphine which are grown in topical areas. Morphine is a derivative of opium, of course.

Today, Medicaid will only pay for methadone treatment. But suppose you arrive in that very same hospital—and the chances are far more likely that you will—in any emergency room in any city of America.

In that critical condition of withdrawal from freebase cocaine, psychotic in the manner that was first described in the Lancet, trying to get off the most intense euphoriant our species has yet encountered. But you "crash" right away. You have to get out of the subsequent depression if you can.

You come to the hospital, asking for help. And what can the hospital do for you? It has no treatment. But, most important, Mr. President, you are eligible for Medicaid reimbursement. Medicaid does not recognize addiction to crack cocaine as a health problem that may be treated in a hospital, simply because there is no treatment.

We find ourselves in the absurd situation of saying, since we have not got a cure, you have not got a disease.

Well, Mr. President, the disease is elementary, it exists, yet we have no cure for it.

There is hope. Some doctors are finding that anticonvulsants used in what laymen would call seizures—are showing promising results. Desipramine is one of them, carbamazepine another—both have had some positive effects.

What other things will work? We cannot readily say because so little effort is being made to find out.

I asked earlier, Mr. President, where was this leading me. It is very simple. Last week I introduced legislation to address this problem. I am very happy to say, it is cosponsored by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD].

Our bill is elementary. It is simple. It says: Treatment for drug addiction is reimbursable by Medicaid.

This means that the hospitals are not going to be overwhelmed by the costs of doing what little they can do presently. But also, Mr. President, and fundamentally, it means that the treatment and care of these sometimes very young persons will now move back into a hospital setting. We cannot treat them in a prison cell. They do not get better there. We do not find out anything about what the problem is when they are placed there.

How do we learn about the problem they have? Get them into hospitals. Get those young doctors, men and women who have an interest in the area of addiction research, to say "I have 15 people in a ward down here and they have all just been using crack cocaine. What if I gave one group drug X? I will give this other group drug Y and I will see what they look like 3 weeks from now." This kind of experimental medicine, clinical medicine, is done in hospitals. We need more of it done.

The amounts of money involved for this legislation is very limited, Mr. President. Unfortunately, we cannot make funds available on the bill we pass today. We cannot make it available for 1990 because of the budget. We should. Perhaps we could, with the efforts of the administration to help us do it.

But I hope to see incorporated in our consensus package the absolute heart of the treatment issue and of our strategy, the one which we put in place last year, which provided treatment for people who need it and want it in hospitals. And, with luck and time—sooner, perhaps, than we expect—I think we will get a cure.

Drug addiction is a disease of the brain. That is all. We are learning now to treat diseases of the brain. It is the last organ the medical profession is getting a hold of. Consider what we have done in medicine and in our legislation. Surely, this is something that we can do—indeed, the law requires us to try. Certainly the condition of our society demands that we try.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will respond to this matter. If we do not, if we pass this bill today or tomorrow and do not make drug treatment reimbursable under Medicaid the people who are suffering from this epidemic in our inner cities, will continue to buy and continue to die. We will record to the Nation that we did not know what we were doing last year. If we are going to go on with the same old, not useless but, in the main, unavailing methods in dealing with the crisis we face today, which is a public health epidemic we will see no end to it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point that the article from the Lancet of March 1, 1986, entitled "Epidemic Freebase Cocaine Abuse, Case Study From the Bahamas" and the Atlanta Journal article be printed in the RECORD to establish that we are talking about a legitimate public health problem which has been addressed in what is called the literature and is yet to be addressed in practice.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follow:

[From the Lancet, Mar. 1, 1986]

EPIDEMIC FREE-BASE COCAINE ABUSE—CASE STUDY FROM THE BAHAMAS

(James F. Jekel,, Henry Polewski, Sandra Dean-Patterson, David F. Allen, Nelson Clarke, Paul Cartwright, Department of Epidemiology and Public Health, Yale University, School of Medicine, New Haven, Connecticut, USA; Community Psychiatry Clinic, Nassau, Bahamas; National Drug Council, Nassau; and Sandilands Rehabilitation Hospital and Sandilands Hospital Drug Clinic, Nassau)

SUMMARY

Beginning in 1983, a sharp increase was noted in the number of new admissions for cocaine abuse to the only psychiatric hospital and to the primary outpatient psychiatric clinic in the Bahamas. For the two facilities combined, new admissions for cocaine abuse increased from none in 1982 to 69 in 1983 and to 523 in 1984. Although there was some evidence for a rise in cocaine use during this time, as the drug became cheaper and more available, a primary cause of this medical epidemic seemed to be a switch by pushers from selling cocaine hydrochloride, which has a low addictive potential, to almost exclusive selling of cocaine free base, which has a very high addictive potential and causes medical and psychological problems. Although the use of free cocaine base is rising around the world, this is the first report of a nationwide medical epidemic due almost exclusively to this form of the drug, although similar problems are reported with smoking coca paste in South America.

INTRODUCTION

The past decade has seen an increase in the use of cocaine in the United States and UK. This drug is not generally perceived as being as harmful as heroin.[1-4] However, data are accumulating to suggest that cocaine is, indeed, a very dangerous drug.[5-8]

Data from the US National Institute on Drug Abuse point to a 91% increase in cocaine-related deaths between 1980 and 1983.[9] Kleber and Gawin[7] have suggested that certain drugs have a low proclivity for producing compulsive-addictive behaviour, so that, say, less than 15% of people using such drugs become addicted; examples are alcohol and marijuana. At the other extreme are drugs such as heroin and nicotine that lead to a compulsive-addictive use pattern in most users. Cocaine may lie at either of these extremes, depending on the method of use.[7] For example, nasal inhalation of cocaine ("snorting") or chewing coca leaves is unlikely to lead to addiction while smoking ("freebasing") or injecting ("shooting") the drug is. A switch in the pattern of cocaine use from snorting to freebasing could this produce a big increase in the number of addicts without a change in the prevalence of cocaine use.

Some are talking now of a cocaine "epidemic" because use of the drug seems to be rising steadily.[2] It would be more accurate to talk of a "long-term secular trend" because "epidemic" suggests a sudden imbalance between the forces that promote and retard a disease. However, a change in cocaine use in the Bahamas does meet the criteria for an epidemic of cocaine abuse.

Our study was initiated by physicians in the Bahamas who were concerned about an apparent rapid increase in cocaine abuse in clinical settings. Several sources were examined retrospectively to see if this clincial perception of a recent large increase in cocaine-related admissions to psychiatric facilities was accurate.

METHODS

The only psychiatric hosptial in the Bahamas is the government-run Sandilands Rehabilitation Hospital (SRH) on New Providence. Patients are referred there from the other islands. In 1980, almost two-thirds of the Bahamian population lived on New Providence, most of them in Nassau. The other three hospitals in the Bahamas (two on New Providence and one on Grand Bahama) seldom accept drug abuse patients and have few psychiatric patients.

The main community mental health clinic in the Bahamas is the Community Psychiarty Clinic (CPC) in Nassau. Most patients who do not go to private psychiatrists or other private physicians use the SRH outpatient services or the CPC. The two small government clinics in Freeport and Eight Mile Rock saw 47 cocaine addicts in 1984, only 14% of the total seen by Bahamian mental health clinics and only 9% of those seen at all government facilities. Drug abuse patients seen in emergency rooms are referred to SRH. Data from the CPC and the SRH on psychiatric cases provide a more complete picture that could be obtained in most areas of the world. Unfortunately, age and sex specific population data from the 1980 census were not yet available so we could not calculate incidence rates. However, because the population was stable over the period of this study, data on trends of new cases are almost as interpretable as rates. An incident case of cocaine abuse was defined as the first admission to the CPC or the SRH for cocaine abuse, even if other diseases were present. If the predominant drug in a polydrug user was cocaine, the case was considered a cocaine abuse admission.

Footnotes at end of article.

Data Sources.—The CPC publishes a monthly summary of cases. We focused on new patients. Alcoholism, non-cocaine-related drug abuse, and cocaine-related drug abuse were studied from the beginning of adequate records in 1982 up to June 30, 1985, Monthly admissions to the SRH were available for 1980—84 and these data indicated the number admitted for alcoholism and/or drug dependence (and whether or not cocaine was the primary drug) and distinguished first from repeat admissions. Admissions to CPC and SRH for alcoholism showed a slow, steady increase and will not be discussed further.

Drug abuse patients among the wealthy minority on the Bahamas will usually seek care outside the CPC or SRH (including the United States) and some cases from the family islands are treated by local physicians. However, there is no evidence of a change in the accessibility of care or the referral patterns in the Bahamas so changes in the pattern of new admissions reported here do reflect changes in the scale of cocaine abuse in the community. Some patients may have been admitted to both the CPC and the SRH, there being no central data system to exclude such duplicate entries. However, doctors who work at both places feel that overlap will have been very small. During the study period, only 4 drug patients admitted to the SRH were referred from the CPC. Likewise, in discussion with most of the few private psychiatrists on New Providence, it was clear that few of the Bahamian drug abusers they see are not referred to the CPC or the SRH. We conclude that the combined incidence data on new drug abusers from the CPC and the SRH cover most people in the Bahamas whose use of cocaine or other drugs caused problems severe enough for them to seek medical assistance.

RESULTS

Community Psychiatry Clinic.—The CRC opened in 1980 but new and returning patients were not distinguished in the clinic statistics until 1982. Fig 1 shows how quarterly numbers of new cocaine-related admissions have risen from none in 1982 to 299 in 1984, there being a probable decline in 1985. During the early phases of cocaine appearance in the CPC, some of the cocaine use may have been recorded only as "drug abuse" or "drug dependence", but the number of such cases would have been small. If the patient used several drugs (as most did), the drug that seemed to have precipitated the problems for which they sought help was recorded.

Drug abuse increased from 1% of the clinic's patients in 1982 to 9% in 1983 to 39% in 1984, and was 31% in the first 6 months of 1985. The big increase in 1984 was due almost entirely to cocaine dependence. Cocaine-related new admissions really began in the third quarter of 1983. New cases of depression and/or schizophrenia have been fairly stable over time, suggesting that the increase in drug patients was not primarily due to increased clinic awareness.

Sandilands Rehabilitation Hospital.—SRH has a long tradition of treating acutely ill alcoholics and drug addicts from the whole of the Bahamas. 86% of the 1984 drug admissions were from New Providence.

Although there were a few cocaine-related admissions during the first three quarters of 1983, a marked increase began in the last quarter of 1983. The number of first drug admissions for which cocaine was the primary cause increased sharply from 1 in 1980 to 224 in 1984 (fig 2). The number of first admissions due primarily to other drugs was more stable. So great was the increase in admissions for cocaine abuse that recording of admission numbers became less complete after November, 1984; numbers for the last quarter of 1984 are estimated from those for October and November.

Often a patient would be admitted with drug abuse and symptoms suggestive of underlying psychiatric disease. Usually the paranoia, hallucinations, and so on were due to the drug use, so whenever cocaine or other drug abuse was indicated as being important, the patient was considered a drug admission.

Mode of Cocaine Use.—Smoking (freebasing) accounted for 98% of cocaine-realted referrals in 1984. Cocaine base (known in the Eastern USA as "crack") is produced when cocaine hydrochloride powder is treated with alkali. It is volatile with modest heating and is easily absorbed through the lungs and rapidly transmitted to the brain. Some experienced addicts made their own freebase cocaine in the early 1980s but most did not know how to do it or did not bother, and the predominant form used to be snorting. By 1984 the pushers were selling only the freebase form, smoked using a homemade pipe ('camoke"). When cocaine is smoked up to 80% of it reaches the brain, and the "rush" can begin in 8–12 s, producing a short period of ecstasy. This fleeting sensation is most powerful on the first use of cocaine and though addicts seek to repeat it the same sensation is not experienced again.

The most common pattern of usage varies from a few hours, during which time the user may consume 4–5 g cocaine, to a few days of intermittent use, usually over a weekend, during which time up to 10 g may be consumed. Most patients using the drug at freebasing parties or "base houses".

Clinical Spectrum.—Cocaine-dependent individuals usually seek help during or after some crisis, financial, social, medical, or psychological. For example, an addict whose money had gone might seek help on his own initiative or under pressure from family, friends, or employers. Others, who had had to steal to support the habit or whose addiction had made them violent, were referred by the courts.

The most common physical problems were seizures, severe itching ("the cocaine bug"), loss of consciousness ("tripping out"), cardiac arrhythmia, vertigo, pneumonia, gastrointestinal symptoms, and avitaminosis associated with severe malnutrition. Several addicts were referred from maternity wards.

The cocaine addicts often presented with severe depression, manifest by unkempt appearance, insommia, anorexia, withdrawal, and suicidal ideation. There were at least 10 cocaine-associated deaths, 5 of which were suicides. Cocaine psychosis was common: the patient would present with severe agitation, impaired judgment, paranoid ideation, intense denial, violent behaviour, threats of suicide or homicide, and hallucinations. In periods of lucidity they would try to mislead the physician, and a relative or friend was needed to confirm the psychotic state.

Demographic Characteristics.—For 1984, 81% of cocaine admissions to SRH were males and male drug abusers in general were aged 11–56 years (mean 25). Cocaine users tended to be slightly older than other drug users (26 vs 22•5 years). Female drug addicts were aged 15–39 years (mean 24 years). Almost all patients were Bahamian.

Other Forms of Surveillance.—Most patients seen at the Sandilands Hospital drug clinic were referred after discharge from the SRH so data from this clinic were not included. About 60% of the patients seen were using both cocaine and cannabis, although it had usually been cocaine that had precipitated the hospital admission. Neither suicide nor drug-related death is usually recorded on death certificates in the Bahamas so we decided not to use vital statistics as a surveillance method. Police statistics showed some increase in street drug arrests in 1984, but not of the magnitude suggested by the clinic and hospital admission data. In 1980–83 drug arrests averaged 1,094 a year with no clear trend over time. There were 1,501 arrests for 1984, an increase of 37%.

DISCUSSION

In the Bahamas, data from psychiatric services demonstrate an epidemic of cocaine abuse requiring medical care. Cannabis and alcohol were often used to control adverse symptoms from cocaine use. In early 1983 something—a major change in the incidence of new drug dealers, especially cocaine users, or in the method of use—upset the previous drug-use equilibrium, suddenly forcing hundreds of people to seek treatment for complications of drug abuse.

The most obvious explanation is that cocaine was suddenly introduced to the islands or that its price fell. Former addicts, who were on cocaine in the 1970s, confirm that cocaine powder had been available, if expensive, for years, but that in late 1982 or early 1983 the drug suddenly became much more plentiful as production in South America increased. The street price of cocaine in Nassau fell to one-fifth of its former level.

Ex-addicts also told us that at about the time that cocaine became more plentiful and cheaper drug pushers switched from selling powdered cocaine ("snow") for nasal inhalation or injection to the pure alkaloid form ("rocks" or "freebase") which is used exclusively for smoking. It suddenly became very difficult to obtain powder in Nassau. By making this change, the drug pushers were forcing all cocaine users to become addicts. Many pushers are themselves addicts and have to sell the drug to feed their own habits. Selling freebase guarantees an eager market for the increasingly available cocaine.

Smith [10] claims that an important reason for the increase in cocaine deaths in the San Francisco area was higher potency cocaine. Siegel [1] reported that recovery of cocaine free base from pure cocaine hydrochloride, using various street kits, ranged from 41% to 72% and, although the kits removed some of the adulterants, some lignocaine and ephedrine, for example, was often left with the cocaine. Ex-addicts indicated that the street cocaine powder in Nassau had usually been "cut" (diluted) about 50% before sale. Although we have no direct data about cocaine purity, the sources for the cocaine remained similar; nor is the extraction process perfect. Changes in levels of purity seem to be an inadequate explanation for our findings.

We conclude that the medical epidemic of cocaine-related physical and psychiatric problems in the Bahamas was related to the interaction of the availability of cheaper cocaine and a switch from powder to free base.

Monitoring the method of selling may be critical both for Western nations, the targets of the cocaine market, and for developing nations such as the Bahamas via which the drug is shipped and those South American countries that produce it. We found surveillance of medical services to be a quick and effective way of monitoring some aspects of the drug situation in the Bahamas, and it could be in the self-interest of target nations to assist producer and trans-shipment countries not only to control drug abuse but also to maintain an intensive surveillance system. As cocaine freebasing becomes more popular and particularly if the vending pattern switches to the freebase form (as is starting to happen in some US cities), emergency rooms, mental health clinics, and psychiatric hospitals will need to prepare for an unprecedented influx of drug addicts.

BAHAMAS "FREE-BASING EPIDEMIC" CITED

NASSAU, BAHAMAS.—A highly addictive practice of smoking cocaine "rocks" has swept this chain of islands off the coast of Florida, a side-effect of the South American-based drug trade that uses the islands as steppingstones for the journey to the United States.

In a country of 230,000 people, the number of cocaine users treated at mental health clinics has zoomed from zero in 1982 to 209 in 1984, according to Dr. David Allen, a Harvard-trained psychiatrist who heads the National Drug Council.

"What we have is the world's first free-basing epidemic (which) could be preceding an epidemic in the industrialized states," Allen said. "Anywhere there is readily available high-quality cocaine, there is this potential."

Dr. Henri Podlewski, director of the Sandilands Hospital where a special unit was created this year to treat free-basers, said free-based cocaine may be the most addictive drug known.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL].

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, as others, I have spent a lot of time grappling with the drug issue. I have attended hearings, spoken with experts, and solicited input from leaders in my home State. And I have reached some conclusions about our drug crisis.

First, the war is going to be won or lost on the demand side. So long as Americans have an appetite for illegal narcotics, smugglers will continue to import their deadly cargo and dealers will continue to peddle their poison. This is not just a hunch; it is based on our experience in the past decade. Despite attempts to eradicate drug crops; despite efforts to inderdict the supply; and despite tough law enforcement, drugs remain available and cheap.

Consider these statistics: the number of Federal drug offenders sentenced to prison rose by 177 percent between 1980 and 1987. And the average prison sentence is now about 6 years, which is almost 2 years longer than it was in 1980. Despite this, the supply of drugs has increased. The Government's National Narcotics Intelligence Consumers Committee—or the NNICC—reports that cocaine is "readily available" and that heroin is "generally available."

In short, Mr. President, we cannot focus solely on supply-side efforts as Attorney General Thornburgh said, "If you want to lose the war on drugs, just leave it to law enforcement." At hearings last week in the Governmental Affairs Committee, we heard from experts who said that the United States should be using an economic carrot instead of a punitive stick—and even that might not work. They also said that if we destroy coca plants in South Amercia, cocaine will be manufactured synthetically in laboratories in the United States.

So we really have to change the behavior of millions; we have to change popular attitudes toward drug usage. This will be a long-haul process, just like the campaign to get Americans off cigarettes. Prevention, education, treatment—these are the investments that will bring us the greatest returns in the end.

Of course I am not suggesting that we surrender our streets or our borders to the drug criminals. Supply-side efforts are certainly one-half of the solution. And law enforcement must be vigilant. In the last few years, Congress has done a good job of toughening penalties. Now we have to concentrate less on the severity of punishment than on the certainty of capture. That is why I favor increasing resources for street-level law enforcement. We get a bigger bang for the buck by having more police on the beat than by purchasing more radar balloons for the border.

In the final analysis, however, we should not deceive ourselves that police—or troops—can solve the drug epidemic. The enemy is not an invader—it is us, the millions of Americans who depend on chemical flights of fantasy to cope with reality. The enemy, Mr. President, is a society that too often ignores its poor and dispossessed, leaving them to the mercy of the drug dealers and drug killers.

Mr. President, I thought it might be useful to share some thoughts from a recent observer. I am referring to Michael Massing, a journalist in New York. He wrote recently a column analyzing the drug crisis. One paragraph was particularly interesting. I would like to share his thoughts:

> The timing of the crack epidemic is hardly accidental. The drug began engulfing our cities in 1985—about the same time as the Reagan budget cuts were taking effect. The slashing of welfare benefits, the phasing out of housing subsidies, the elimination of job programs—all this impaired the immune system of our inner cities.
> As a result, when the crack virus hit, America's poor were unable to fight it off. The infection quickly became a contagion.

Mr. President, this is indeed a contagion. As the distinguished Senator from New York said this morning, we face a public health crisis. We need to keep this in mind as the day progresses, as we act on this bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll, the absence of a quorum having been suggested.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last week, the Senate approved the Department of Transportation appropriation bill which fully funded the President's national drug control strategy and crime bill. Also contained in the bill were four legislative initatives which were proposed in the strategy, leaving just one remaining item for consideration by this body.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement that controlled consideration of the appropriation bill, the Senate agreed to consider the remaining initiative as a freestanding bill. Yesterday, I introduced that bill, S. 1711, which requires drug testing by State and local governments of those arrested, incarcerated, or on probation or parole.

There has been a fair amount of controversy concerning this provision. It has been suggested that the cost of requiring State and local officials to drug test everyone—that is the keyword "everyone"—falling into these categories would be prohibitive. I admit that if the requirement were that extensive, the administration estimated cost of $800 million would be beyond the ability of State and local governments to pay.

However, that is not contemplated by the bill. It merely requires that each State, within its own drug strategy, must include drug testing of some of those arrested, some incarcerated and some of those on probation or parole.

Therefore, the $800 million estimate is not valid in the discussion of this bill, since no requirement to test all individuals in those classes is contained in the bill.

Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, I ask unanimous consent that a cost estimate, based on total testing, be printed in the RECORD. Again, I want to remind my colleagues that this estimate will never be reached.

There being no objection, the cost estimate was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Costs of Drug Testing

[In billions of dollars]

Criminal Justice System:
Arrestees	0.21
Pre-trial population	.17
Probationers	.33
Parolees	.05
Prisoners	.02
State and local employees	.02
Subtotal—drug testing	.80

ARRESTEES

The 1988 Uniform Crime Report total estimated arrestees for "Index" offenses was 13,813,300.

Assuming that:

1. All arrestees are tested during initial processing;

2. Average cost of one test for one drug is $3.00* and that most programs test for 5 drugs (cocaine, opiates, marijuana, amphetamine, PCP) for a total of $15.00 per person. (Note: As the volume of tests increases the cost/test would drop below $15.00.)

Cost of initial test would be $207 million.

(*Includes direct and indirect costs—equipment, personnel, facilities.)

PRE-TRIAL POPULATION

Assuming that:

1. 20% of all arrestees are dismissed without further processing (based on anecdotal experience);

2. The remaining 80% or 11,049,840 make up the pre-trial population;

3. 25% of this population or 2,762,640 is randomly tested once a month (on an unannounced basis) for four months (average pre-trial waiting period),

Cost of testing pre-trial population would be $166 million.

PROBATIONERS

According to a Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) report of March 1988 there were 1,814,915 persons on probation in 1985.

Assuming that:

1. Average time on probation is one year;

2. Half of all probationers are tested;

3. Testing is done twice a month,

Cost to test Probation population would be $327 million.

PAROLEES

According to the 1988 BJS report the total number of parolees in 1985 was 260,578 and the average time on parole is 19 months.

Assuming that:

1. 50% of parolees are tested;

2. Testing is done twice a month,

Cost to test Parole population would be $47 million.

PRISONERS

Population projections for State and local facilities indicate a prisoner population of 1 million by 1990.

Assuming that:

1. 80% (800,000) are subject to random testing;

2. A random plan tests half of the inmate population (400,000) at four unannounced times a year,

Cost of a random testing plan would be $24 million.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, further, I want to inform the body that I filed an amendment to the bill yesterday which would clearly state that the ability of State and local governments to pay for the testing would be taken into account in the drafting of the drug-testing regulations.

But, we do need the information which would result from this testing. We need to know how much drug use contributes to crime, how much drug use exists in prisons and jails, whether drug use is prevalent among those who are released on probation or parole. It seems to me it certainly is a legitimate question, and we ought to be getting information.

Quite frankly, we should take action against those who test negative, as is required by the bill. For example, if a convicted felon is found to be using drugs while in prison, I would suggest that he is probably not the best candidate for parole.

I do not believe anyone can disagree that this provision is an essential component in our coordinated efforts to fight drug supply and abuse. The Congress called for the drug strategy, the administration provided a solid blueprint for the war on drugs, and it's now time for the Congress to complete the circle by approving the remaining legislative initiative.

Much depends on what happens in the Congress on the other four initiatives. I know that my colleagues in the Senate who supported those initiatives will do everything they can to prevail in the conference with the House.

Finally, Mr. President, the agreement entered on the Transportation appropriations bill also provides for consideration of the President's crime bill before we adjourn. As with this provision, if we are serious about combating drug abuse and other crime in our country, we must give the police, prosecutors, and the courts the necessary nonmoney tools they are demanding.

The death penalty, habeas corpus reform, and a good-faith exemption to the exclusionary rule would certainly be a good place to start. We have demonstrated that we can spend money on the problem. It is now time to prove that we can address the other parts of the package. That is why I think this particular amendment, though we certainly cannot test everyone, is important. It should be considered; it should be adopted. I am pleased to introduce the bill for the administration and I did, as I said, introduce an amendment to clarify questions raised by Members on each side as to whether or not everyone should be tested.

Mr. President, I would say, I have contacted Senator HATCH who will manage this bill on the Republican side and hopefully we can move forward. I know the majority leader has a very heavy schedule this week. At 12:15, there will be a cloture vote on another matter that is pending before the Senate, and this afternoon we are off on a nomination. So we would like to complete some action on this particular bill yet this morning.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into morning business for a period not to exceed 10 minutes in order that the Senator from Ohio might address himself to the matter before us, the cloture motion, on which I did not get a chance to speak on Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] is recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes.

INVESTIGATION OF EASTERN AIRLINES DISPUTE

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the amendment to create a blue ribbon commission to investigate the labor dispute at Eastern Airlines.

I believe we are witnessing the demise of what was once one of America's greatest airlines. We must take action to help resolve this bitter labor dispute before it is too late.

Frankly, I believe appointment of a Presidential emergency board is the correct response to this situation. I am not alone in that belief. For over 60 years, the proper response under the Railway Labor Act for resolving labor disputes has been to create an emergency board. In fact, the Reagan-Bush administration created 11 emergency boards.

I reiterated my position in an August 10 letter to President Bush urging the President to reconsider his initial opposition to such an emergency board.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my letter to President Bush be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, August 10, 1989.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have watched with growing concern the events at Eastern Air Lines. We are witnessing the demise of what once was one of America's greatest airlines. I believe it is imperative that you take action to help resolve this troubling situation before it is too late.

Eastern and its employees have been locked in a bitter labor dispute for over two years. Earlier this year, you declined to authorize the creation of a Presidential Emergency Board to avoid a work stoppage and help mediate a resolution to the dispute. I strongly believed then, as I do now, that a Presidential Emergency Board would have been the correct response to the situation.

Within days after Eastern stopped flying, the airline filed for bankruptcy. Since that time, Eastern's lucrative shuttle service has been sold, and other portions of the airline may be sold off on a piecemeal basis. These developments are in addition to the sale of many valuable assets prior to the commencement of the work stoppage. I fear that many industry observers are correct in saying that Eastern is heading toward complete liquidation. The elimination of one of America's major airlines has profound implications for competition in the industry, for the employees of the airline, and for the travelling public.

Significantly, many concerns have been raised about public safety now that Eastern has begun to hire and train new pilots for its aircraft. I am concerned that safety may be compromised as Eastern increasingly schedules flights operated by inexperienced crews.

I believe it is incumbent upon your Administration to show leadership in resolving this longstanding dispute. I strongly urge you to reconsider your initial opposition to an emergency board and to order the immediate formation of such a board. It is not too late to save Eastern, but time is running out. If you are not willing to reconsider your position on the emergency board, at the very least I urge you to form a cabinet-level task force to review the situation at Eastern, particularly with regard to public safety, the financial soundness of the proposed reorganization plans, the implications to competition in the industry, and the effects on Eastern's employees. The American public deserves to know that its safety and interests are being protected. I urge you to act promptly.

I hope to hear from you concerning this matter at your earliest convenience.

Very sincerely yours,

HOWARD M. METZENBAUM,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Labor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. It is now obvious that the President will not appoint an emergency board. It is now obvious that unless the Congress takes action, the President is content to do nothing while the families of 30,000 Eastern workers continue to suffer.

That is not right. It is the obligation of those of us concerned about the economy of this country, concerned about the families of this country who are involved in this labor dispute to allow a Presidential emergency board an opportunity to speak on the subject.

Unfortunately, the President is willing to allow a major disruption of commerce and dramatically reduced air service for dozens of cities in this country. He will sit back comfortably in Air Force One while American consumers juggle their travel plans; try to collect prepaid fares from the bankruptcy court; and worry about flying on the new Eastern with inexperienced flight and ground crews.

I am proud to say that last month I walked the picket line with Eastern employees at the Hopkins Airport in Cleveland—employees who are pilots, employees who are machinists. I urge every Member of this body to go to a picket line to talk to the workers and to learn from them about their concerns and why they still are on strike. These men and women are loyal, dedicated employees. They have devoted their lives to Eastern. They want to go back to work, but they want to be treated fairly.

As recently as the last 24 hours, I was talking with somebody who told me about an Eastern Airlines pilot who had given so much of himself to this company. He was is a position to get the top position in the cabin but did not want to go back to work under these circumstances.

But the current Eastern management, led by one of America's worst aviation buccaneers—Mr. Frank Lorenzo—is not interested in running a profitable airline. He is not interested in being fair to his employees. Frankly, he has been a dismal failure in running airlines in this country. Mr. Lorenzo is more interested in shifting assets, upstreaming cash, and busting unions.

Let us look at the record. In 1982, Mr. Lorenzo bought Continental Airlines. Within a year he had forced Continental into bankruptcy, and under protection of the bankruptcy court he canceled valid union contracts and hired low-wage, nonunion replacements. Now, 6 years later, Continental has the lowest wage structure in the industry, and it still has been swimming in a sea of red ink. This is at the same time that highly unionized airlines like United and American and USAir are making record profits. In 1986, Mr. Lorenzo bought People Express and Frontier Airlines.

I remember when I was with my wife in the lobby trying to get on a People Express plane, and it was like a mob scene; people were so anxious to fly with People Express. They offered cheap rates. But Mr. Lorenzo ran that airline so poorly and caused so much disruption in the lives of American people that they turned their backs on him, and there is no longer a People Express Airline.

He eliminated People Express Airline, he eliminated Frontier Airlines. What did he do? He alienated the employees and folded the assets into his giant holding company.

History is repeating itself at Eastern. Lorenzo bought the airline in 1986 and last March it had 30,000 employees. Lorenzo took the airline into bankruptcy after he was unwilling to agree to binding arbitration to resolve the labor dispute. I came out of a situation in my own home community where I had represented labor unions, where I had been a part of management as well, where I had been on the other side with respect to labor, and in many instances arbitration was the answer. So often it is in today's workplace.

But Mr. Lorenzo did not want to go into arbitration. He did not want to resolve the dispute. No. He wanted to go into bankruptcy and use it again to bust the union. The bankruptcy rules have been changed to prevent the abuses of the Continental bankruptcy, but that has not stopped Mr. Lorenzo. He and his hired guns are trying to manipulate those new rules to reach the same result—bust the union and hire low-wage replacements.

The new Eastern has some 15,000 employees. The new Eastern is losing millions of dollars a day. The new Eastern is really the old Continental. Eastern is now leasing 29 Continental planes and crews at $1 million per month per airplane, which is higher than the industry leasing cost. But that should not surprise anyone. Lorenzo has been transferring assets and cash from Eastern to Continental for years. It is not just my assessment. That is according to the Wall Street Journal in an article about Mr. Lorenzo's "house of mirrors."

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of that article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit No. 1.)

Mr. METZENBAUM. The article is very interesting and very telling. It documents transaction after transaction where valuable assets like a reservation system or airport gates or cash are drained from Eastern for the benefit of some other unit in the Lorenzo corporate maze.

Given this history, I have great concern that we are about to lose Eastern as a viable airline. And I am not just concerned about Eastern. I held hearings in the Judiciary Committee on the corporate structure of the airline industry. Eastern is not the only airline built upon a corporate house of mirrors. Just a few days ago Braniff filed for bankruptcy for a second time. Since we enacted airline deregulation in 1978, 78 air carriers have filed for bankruptcy.

Let me repeat that. In the last 11 years, since we deregulated the airline industry, 78 air carriers have filed for bankruptcy.

The American people today do not have a choice with respect to flying this airline or that airline. It is no longer a competitive industry. We cannot afford to lose another airline. That is why I believe we should create this blue ribbon commission. The proposed commission would be bipartisan. It would review the current Eastern dispute, but it would also study the entire airline industry. Within 45 days the commission would report back to us with recommendations on how to resolve this dispute and how to protect the traveling public from disruptions in airline service.

No one would be bound by those recommendations. But the recommendations may be helpful. They may bring the parties together. The commission is the least we can do to help workers and the traveling public.

I hope my colleagues in this body will see fit to allow this debate to come to a conclusion. There really is no debate. Nobody is coming out here opposing it. So the opportunity to invoke cloture means that it would be an up or down vote with respect to whether or not there should be a commission.

I think every right-thinking person has to agree that no useful purpose is served to the Nation or to the people of this country, by prolonging the debate. It certainly would not benefit the workers—the machinists, the pilots and the flight attendants—who are giving up their jobs while they are fighting to hold onto their jobs, giving up income while they are holding on, while fighting for their jobs.

I think in fairness we should invoke cloture. I think in fairness we should enact this legislation. I believe we owe nothing less to the workers at Eastern Airlines who have indicated their strong commitment to want to work at a decent wage, and under decent working conditions. I believe we owe it to them and, yes, we owe it to the American people that we go forward and enact this legislation today.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio makes a point of no quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I have just addressed myself to the pending Eastern Airlines strike, and I alluded to the fact that since deregulation 78 airlines have gone into bankruptcy. I think it is time for us to reregulate the airline industry.

I am frank to admit on this floor that when this whole push toward deregulation was in effect, when we were talking about it, I was one of those who was very much in favor of breaking up AT&T. I thought that would provide for free competition. I have to admit publicly that is probably the worst decision I have made in my life. It has been a fiasco since then. It worked well before. The prices were lower. There was regulation, and the American people were getting good telephone service at reasonable rates.

We deregulated the airline industry. I thought that was a great idea. But I was wrong, and so were many others in this body—as well as many who have left this body. We made a mistake. It is time to bring back some regulation in the airline industry. You would not have 78 airlines who have gone bankrupt at this point, if that were the case. You have to provide some help and assistance. What you now have is a situation where an airline comes along, a stronger airline cuts its rates, gives better service, and drives out the little company. The little company closes its doors. Then the bigger company cuts back on its services, raises the rates, and the American people pay the price.

I believe that it is time now, not 6 months from now, not 2 years from now, for the U.S. Congress to enact legislation providing for reregulation of the airline industry.

I am frank to say that although I do not have a bill drafted at this point, I am confident there are others in this body who will be prepared to join me in urging the Commerce Committee to conduct prompt hearings with respect to the subject of reregulation. We cannot do less. Ask any one of the Members of this body who flies to his or her home, "Are you getting the quality of service that you used to get?" Look at the rates you pay. You can fly for a lesser amount all the way across the country from New York to Los Angeles, where there is some competition, than you can from Washington to a place like Nashville or to a place like Charleston, WV, or Columbus, OH, because there is no competition there. You have to hope that you can find an airline that will be going at a convenient hour of the day.

If we had the temerity, if we had the judgment in yesteryear to deregulate this industry, then we ought to publicly admit our wrong, and we ought to publicly come forward and support legislation to reregulate the industry.

I will be working, and hopefully, I will be able to obtain the support and assistance of such distinguished Senators as my colleague from West Virginia, who is in the presiding chair at the moment, and possibly my friend from Wisconsin, Senator KOHL. I believe this is the kind of legislation we need. I will work on it promptly, and I will introduce legislation to that effect.

I have a hunch that I will find more of my colleagues ready to support me on this bill than maybe many of the others that I have seen fit to introduce in the past.

I yield the floor.

HOUSE OF MIRRORS: LORENZO'S TEXAS AIR KEEPS COLLECTING FEES FROM AIRLINE UNITS THAT HAVE CONTINUING LOSSES

(By Thomas Petzinger, Jr. and Paulette Thomas)

HOUSTON.—Imagine a house of many rooms.

Every room has a paying tenant. A bank can foreclose on an individual room, but not on the whole house. The landlord has many partners, but no one can challenge his management of the property.

This is the house that Frank Lorenzo built.

As the chairman of Texas Air Corp., Mr. Lorenzo presides over some of the nation's sickest airlines—Continental, Eastern, the corporate remnants of People Express, Frontier and New York Air. All are losing money at some of the fastest rates in aviation history and rank as the industry's biggest debtors. As such, they are blocked by their lenders from paying profit to the parent company for years.

Yet thanks to Mr. Lorenzo's masterly corporate architecture, huge losses at subsidiaries don't stop cash from moving to the top. While the airlines' public debt holders anxiously watch the deficits close in on half a billion dollars, the parent company keeps raking in from the airlines an assortment of management fees, airplane rents, airportgate rents, fuel-purchase commissions and other payments. "Upstreaming" of cash, company officials call this, and it totaled more than $150 million for the parent last year.

Perhaps most remarkable, Mr. Lorenzo has built one of the most leveraged major corporations in the nation while insulating Texas Air—and himself—from most of the cost and much of the risk. As a group, the Texas Air companies have piled up $5.4 billion in debt. Last year they had to pay $623 million simply to service the long-term part of that debt—an interest bill higher than the annual revenue of each of nearly 100 companies at the bottom of the Fortune 500. Yet parent Texas Air paid creditors barely one-tenth that amount.

REPORTS TO SEC

Now, reports filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission show how far the airlines have to go. The reports, among other things, list some $7 billion in lease-related liabilities that are invisible on the balance sheet, and they show that Texas Air's once-huge cash reserves were dwindling last year at a rate of more than $1 million a day. The situation is not without irony; the entire Texas Air empire, after a year that produced the company's biggest net loss ever—$466 million—has just won its first unqualified auditors' opinion in five years.

All this may make the 47-year-old Mr. Lorenzo the quintessential manager-on-the-edge—a live practitioner of the concept that cash flow is more important than profits. Fighting a war of attrition against the losses at this ailing airlines, he buys time with a seemingly foolproof trickle-up system. If he eventually wins the war—curbs Eastern's costs and fixes Continental's service problems—his airlines, with their exceptional size and market dominance, may become for him a kind of mass-production profit machine.

Should he fail, well, the parent company could be hurt, yet it would be almost sure to remain standing. For by financing the operation so piecemeal and by draping it with so many corporate veils, Mr. Lorenzo has left most of the leverage to himself—and not to airline creditors. Mr. Lorenzo, though his personal investment is virtually nil, preserves voting control with corporate defenses that make poison pills look like penny candy.

SCRIP AND DEBT

Mr. Lorenzo declined to be interviewed, although a Texas Air spokesman responded to a list of written questions. The company has always maintained that it conducts internal transactions at arm's length, and that its overriding goal is to build profitable airlines. Texas Air, however—viewed solely as a parent company, segregated from the consolidated empire that reports financial results—ran a "modest" profit in 1987, the spokesman said.

This is a company in which internal transactions worth hundreds of millions of dollars have been conducted with house money, securities labeled "scrip." At the same time, with 24 issues of publicly traded securities listed on U.S. exchanges, Mr. Lorenzo treats the financing markets like drive-up teller windows. In one of many private placements, Eastern, desperate for $200 million in cash, last month agreed to pay 17.25%, or more than twice the prime rate.

Partly by happenstance, partly by design, Mr. Lorenzo has created one of the nation's most complex major corporations. "It took me months to figure this company out," says Richard Bilotti, who worked on Texas Air's first junk-bond issue at Kidder, Peabody & Co. and who now follows the company as a junk-bond analyst for Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. "I've opened Texas Air annual reports and documents and thought, 'I'm going to become a TV repairman.' "

But within the units, crisis seems to follow upon crisis. The reports to the SEC last week—"10K" filings by Texas Air, Continental, Eastern and the surviving corporate shell of People Express—spell out the problems. The parent's report lists six pages of litigation and even a 130-sponsor congressional resolution demanding a federal investigation of Texas Air's affairs.

At Eastern, executives worry that lenders could repossess assets if a threatened strike takes hold. At Continental, officials expect further big losses for the first quarter, partly from the cost of overcoming continuing customer service problems. The reports tell how New York Air temporarily slipped into default on one lending agreement. And they show how the net worth of the entire enterprise—the largest airline operation in the noncommunist world—sank 38% last year, to just $500 million.

Mr. Lorenzo keeps the enterprise going with techniques that range from the iron fist to the velvet glove. After cutting a deal to acquire People Express in 1986, he twice forced debt holders to accept reduced terms. Yet a few years ago, at a presentation to Standard & Poor's Corp., he slipped his arm around the shoulders of a ratings agent, quietly pleading for a bond rating better than triple-C.

To Mr. Lorenzo's critics, the structure of Texas Air is a blueprint for greed—designed by Mr. Lorenzo and a few close associates "to satisfy their own selfish desire," as the public debt holders of Continental once alleged in a lawsuit; "to destroy trade-union representation," as the machinists' union claims in a suit filed this month; or to "loot Eastern for the benefit of Texas Air," as the pilots' union charges in another suit.

But if Mr. Lorenzo is intent on personal enrichment, it isn't evident from his operations to date. He does draw a $1,000-a-day salary, has profited nicely from personal transactions with the company and has traded Texas Air shares in the market adroitly. But he has hardly accumulated the kind of wealth available to most executives who personally control $8 billion-a-year enterprises, Mr. Lorenzo gets his jollies running marathons rather than collecting antique cars or European guest houses.

The exotic structure of the enterprise, has, however, given him the chance to earn a little more than mad money.

Mr. Lorenzo maintains control of the empire through a special class of supervoting stock held by his flyspeck personal holding company, Jet Capital Corp. With only 1% of the equity of Texas Air, it has 34% voting control. The investment company, which shares its headquarters and telephone number with Texas Air's New York office, also invests jointly with Texas Air and conducts other activities in whose spoils Mr. Lorenzo shares as Jet Capital's 52% shareholder.

The way Eastern Airlines has been treated in a few transactions is worth a look. For instance, according to Texas Air's SEC filing last week. Jet Capital arranged a $1.25 million fee for itself for advising Texas Air on its recent plan to shift ownership of Eastern's East Coast shuttle to a new Texas Air subsidiary for $225 million. In exchange for its role in "structuring" the transaction through a chain of five corporations, Jet Capital was also awarded an equity interest in the new unit.

Jet Capital, alas, may receive only part of its fee and may never receive its equity stake. For at the behest of Eastern's union leaders, a federal judge last month put the brakes on Mr. Lorenzo's efforts to continually reconfigure Texas Air, temporarily blocking the shuttle sale as a violation of Eastern's labor agreements.

Ever since acquiring debt-plagued Eastern 16 months ago, Mr. Lorenzo has been carving up the airline to bring Eastern's few profitable operations closer to home. It began with Eastern's computer-reservations subsidiaries, System One Direct Access Inc. and EAL Automation Systems Inc., which in 1986 generated $255 million in cash. The units' profits however, merely subsidized Eastern's huge overall deficits.

Eastern's own investment bankers had valued part of the system at between $200 million and $320 million. But Texas Air paid Eastern just $100 million for the whole works—and not in cash but in a note bearing interest of only 6.5%, payable in 2001.

CONVERTIBLE INTO STOCK

"If one were creating junk, this would be at the bottom of the barrel," says Farrell Kupersmith, a senior partner in the accounting firm of Touche, Ross & Co. Today, Mr. Kupersmith advises the pilots' union at Eastern, but when Continental went through bankruptcy proceedings in the mid-1980s, he testified against the unions. Explaining his switch in sides, the accounting executive says, "We have a pro-business bias, but the system here is being abused."

Texas Air justified the terms of the transaction with the fairness opinion of an investment banking firm. These are no mere 6.5% notes, after all. Eastern can convert them into, of all things, the common stock of its parent company; of course, for Eastern to do so profitably. Texas Air's shares would have to be worth more than their all-time high of $51.50 apiece, according to calculations by Touche Ross. They trade at about $12 now.

Eastern explains the sale of the reservations system by noting that only the parent company had the wherewithal to upgrade its software and set System One on an expansion binge. Texas Air combined the former Eastern unit with CCS Automation System Inc., a system it had picked up from Continental a year earlier for $15 million. As a direct unit of Texas Air, it has become the third-ranked and fastest-growing reservation system in the all-important travel-agent market.

But today, System One draws funds from Continental and Eastern that the airlines used to pay to themselves. These include a fee of $1.65 for every airline reservation plus other fees, payments that total about $130 million a year in Eastern's case alone. A Texas Air spokesman declines to say what income, if any, the parent company is drawing from this flourishing new unit. But neither do the financial statements reveal any injection of capital by the parent. In the true style of a Texas Air unit, System One has accumulated $64 million of its own debt.

IONOSPHERE CLUB

Other assets and operations have been switched out of Eastern. For instance, it sold 11 gates at Newark International Airport to Continental for $11 million—in a promissory note paying 10% interest. Yet Eastern sold eight gates and related facilities in the smaller market of Charlotte, N.C., to Piedmont Aviation for $25 million. Eastern explains that the gates in Charlotte were especially valuable to Piedmont because its hub is there, and says the price paid Continental squares with other Newark gate sales.

Eastern has suspended nonstop service from its hometown of Miami to London and on more than a dozen other routes; Continental later began service on the same routes. A new unit has been created to hold Eastern's chain of members-only Ionosphere Clubs—a sure sign, Eastern's unions contend, that they, too, will be moved to Continental. Eastern says it merely wanted to segregate the profitable club chain from the airline's problems.

"Eastern's new management team is in the business of running an airline, not dismantling it," the company says in a position paper recently distributed on Capitol Hill. Until labor costs are slashed and losses reversed, the company adds, "it should not surprise anyone that the company is smaller."

If Texas Air's planes and gates and reservation systems are structured like a modular home, with movable walls for maximum flexibility, its finances seem more like a hall of mirrors.

New York Air assumed nearly $50 million of debt in the failed Frontier Airlines subsidiary of the nearly failed People Express—but the debt was also guaranteed by Texas Air. Eastern, though desperate for cash, paid Texas Air $25 million—"for investment purposes"—in exchange for notes in People Express. (The notes yield 20%, a Texas Air spokesman says.)

When Continental bought 50% of Bar Harbor Airways, a commuter that feeds passengers to Eastern, the apparently grateful Eastern paid Continental a fee of $1 million—although the whole sale was worth only $1.5 million.

Then there are the leases. People express's SEC filing described one of these succinctly, if not necessarily simply: The lease, involving a Boeing 747 worth $30 million, was "sold by the lessor in a sale and leaseback transaction pursuant to which the aircraft was leased to a special-purpose subsidiary of Texas Air and simultaneously subleased to the airline under an operating lease agreement."

At the operating level, such day-to-day dealings can go over the heads of even top executives. Michael Levine, a Yale Law School professor who served as president of Mr. Lorenzo's once-promising New York Air unit, always tried to make sure that the unit's public shareholders were treated fairly in transactions which Texas Air—as, he says, they were. "Other than that," he adds, "it wasn't a concern of mine how many layers it came through."

PAINT JOB

Much of Texas Air's complexity happened by accident—or by circumstance, at least. Though its planes were repainted in Continental colors. People Express remains a separate entity, an arrangement that, among others things, helps shield the rest of the empire from huge litigation claims. Frontier Airlines, though also a Continental unit, remains in Chapter 11 proceedings, which began just before its acquisition by Texas Air. Mr. Lorenzo created Texas Air Leasing so that Continental, which underwent its own bankruptcy reorganization from 1983 to 1986, could launch a feverish expansion—leasing planes from Texas Air rather than trying to acquire them on its own.

Tax matters, too, drive much of Texas Air's complexity, even though as a big money-loser "Texas Air is not a taxpayer on a consolidated basis under any circumstances," as one of the company's investment bankers puts it. The company's $7 billion in off-books liabilities consist of long-term rent payments for planes that Texas Air might otherwise own; renting them enables some profitable owner to take depreciation deductions and share the savings with Texas Air. And because the units have lost such stunning sums, dissolving their corporate identities would forfeit a windfall of future tax benefits, assuming they ever have profits to shelter.

Finally, Texas Air's financing has left Mr. Lorenzo some breathing room to wage his cost war with organized labor and to attack his operating problems. For this year and next, long-term debt will mature at a rate of only about $300 million a year; by 1992, the cost will have climbed to more than $500 million. And while the whole empire's debt-service costs have risen 485% in the past three years, the parent's debt-service cost has remained steady or declined slightly, without giving effect to relatively small preferred-dividend payments.

Thus, in 1988, Texas Air needs only in "upstream" $83.7 million to meet its obligations to debt holders, preferred shareholders and aircraft lessor. And while the company won't disclose how much money it expects to take in from units, it is clear the parent will be well provided for.

Eastern and Continental burned an estimated 2.5 billion gallons of fuel last year. For efficiency's sake, a single unit, Texas Air Fuel Management Inc., supplied the fuel—but it collected a penny a gallon from the airlines for doing so. Continental currently pays Texas Air more than $9 million a month in rent for 51 aircraft and 21 gates. Management fees and debt-guarantee fees totaled an estimated $32 million last year. This grand total, not counting any income from the plum reservations unit, gains on cash investments or any undisclosed income: about $150 million.

Even that won't be enough when the company, in 1990, has to begin paying off the huge debt issues that financed its pellmell growth. But so far, nobody at Texas Air seems to be panicking.

"At some point," says Robert Snedeker, senior vice president and treasurer, "we would anticipate it would be appropriate to look for something beyond breaking even."

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today to express my concern not only for the plight of Eastern Airlines and its striking employees but also for what appears to be an increasingly ominous trend in the airline industry as a whole. The current climate of increased industry concentration through mergers and acquisitions raises serious questions about the future of the commercial airline industry. The recent bankruptcy filing by Braniff Airlines further emphasizes the urgent need for an examination of the broader public policy issues affecting the entire industry.

While I would support efforts by a blue ribbon commission to examine the current competitive structure of the deregulated airline industry, I have reservations about the proposed legislation. I am certainly sympathetic to the very real hardships suffered by the many striking employees of Eastern. But I am hesitant, absent a national emergency, to involve Congress in a pending labor dispute. I believe it would create an incentive in the future for unions or employers to look to Congress to settle their disputes. For this reason, it would be unwise for any proposed blue ribbon commission to address the specific problems faced only by Eastern airlines.

Instead, I would support the establishment of a blue ribbon panel that would investigate and make recommendations to Congress on the broader, far-reaching problems faced by the entire industry. Increased industry concentration, the recent takeover fever, and greater foreign investment are just a few of the problems that need to be addressed immediately.

Mr. President, I support the motion to invoke cloture, because I believe it will require us to reach an immediate resolution of this important issue and will afford us the opportunity to consider alternatives in reaching that resolutions. Too many lives are affected, both employees and travelers alike, to set this problem aside.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering a petition filed by the distinguished majority leader to allow the Senate to begin debate on a substitute to H.R. 1231, dealing with the strike at Eastern Airlines. I must oppose this motion for several reasons.

First, the strike at Eastern Airlines began over 7 months ago. Prolonged labor disputes are always painful for employees' families and this strike has certainly taken its toll on many. I recognize that many have suffered, and I sympathize with those families for their losses. Nonetheless, we should not lose sight of the fact that this is a private labor dispute and that a system for resolving that dispute is taking place as we speak today.

For over a year and a half before the strike at Eastern last March, the National Mediation Board attempted to resolve the single labor dispute which led to the strike. They were unsuccessful. Last April, the bankruptcy court appointed an examiner to look into Eastern's financial situation and deal with its labor problems. This process continues today.

The substitute to H.R. 1231 seeks to establish a three-member commission—one member appointed by the House of Representatives, one by the U.S. Senate, and one person by the Department of Transportation. These three people would be asked not only to make recommendations on the Eastern dispute, but also to look into a broad range of airline policy issues including concentration in the industry, treatment of airline employees in bankruptcy proceedings, foreign ownership of airlines, and hiring replacement workers during a strike.

Mr. President, Congress has in place a more appropriate forum to study and act on overall airline matters; I commend my colleagues on the Aviation Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee, who have already held hearings on several of these issues. These are important issues worthy of a good deal of attention. Let us not short-change their importance by directing three people to attempt to acquire the kind of expertise necessary to make policy recommendations in these areas in only 45 days.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio makes the point of no quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might proceed for 5 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Missouri may proceed out of order for not to exceed 5 minutes.

ACID RAIN LEGISLATION

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, today the Environment and Public Works Committee begins hearings on legislation to control acid rain. There is no question that acid rain is a serious problem. Every effort must be made to find a sensible solution.

As we look for the answer, we must recognize that solving the acid rain problem imposes costs. The issue is not whether those costs should be incurred—surely they should be. The issue is how to distribute the cost in the fairest and most reasonable manner.

I believe the best solution should be cost effective; that is, it should substantially reduce the amount of acid rain at the least possible cost. It would be foolish to reduce acid rain from every source. That would be very expensive and wasteful. Instead we should target those powerplants that can achieve the greatest reductions most economically. Both the President's bill and the Mitchell-Baucus proposal use a targeting strategy. Unfortunately they also require nine States in the Midwest, including Missouri, to bear a disproportionate share of the cost of the program. Targeting is the best approach, but it should be fair to those States that are targeted. Acid rain is not a product of nine States alone. It is a national problem that requires a national solution.

Sharing the cost nationally is not a radical demand. We have used it to build hydroelectric dams in the Tennessee Valley and in the Pacific Northwest. We have used it through the Superfund to pay for the cleanup of hazardous waste. The same principle should apply to acid rain.

Absent cost-sharing, Midwestern States like Missouri will face steep increases in electricity rates, perhaps as much as 20 percent. Our residential consumers, especially those on fixed incomes, will be hurt. Our industries will see their competitiveness eroded by the higher prices they will have to pay for electricity.

Mr. President, it is time to solve the acid rain problem. I think the will now exists in Congress to do what we have been unable to do in the past. But let us not allow this momentum to turn one region of the country against another. Let us deal with acid rain as a national problem with a national solution.

Mr. President, today the Committee on Environment and Public Works begins hearings on legislation to control the problem of acid rain. Acid rain is indeed a serious national and international problem, and I support efforts to find a solution to it. But I think it is important to recognize that acid rain legislation will have effects beyond environmental policy. Because acid rain legislation will affect how our public utilities may generate electricity and the cost of this electricity, any solution to the acid rain problem will by necessity impact on our national energy policy and the ability of American businesses to remain competitive internationally. I urge the Environment Committee to keep these policy implications in mind as they consider proposed acid rain legislation.

From the perspective of our national energy policy, I think it is important that acid rain legislation provide for flexibility. Utilities and local regulators must be allowed to choose how best to comply with the new emissions requirements, whether through traditional or innovative clean coal technology, fuel switching, conservation, or some combination of these options. So long as the required emission reductions are met, no particular source of power or method of generation should be favored.

This principle of flexibility should also apply to the administrative structure of any acid rain reduction program. We must ensure that the environmental regulations created by this legislation take into account the real world of power generation by public utilities. For example, provision must be made for fluctuations in energy demand caused by uncontrollable factors like extreme weather conditions. In order to accommodate local and regional variations, an emissions trading system like that proposed by the President should also be incorporated to ensure flexibility.

We must also take in account the economic impact of acid rain controls. I believe that the best solution to the acid rain problem is one that poses the least overall cost to the economy. Rather than making costly incremental reductions in emissions at every source, our efforts should be targeted at those powerplants that can achieve the greatest reductions most economically. Under both the President's bill and the recently announced proposal by Senators MITCHELL and BAUCUS, this means nine States in the Midwest will bear a disproportionate share of the cost of the Acid Rain Program. While I agree that it is appropriate to focus our efforts on a few powerplants in a few States for reasons of cost-effectiveness, fairness dictates that the cost of this cleanup be shared on a national basis. Acid rain is not the product of nine States alone. It is a national problem that requires a national solution.

Mr. President, cost-sharing is not a radical demand. In fact, a system of national cost-sharing has long been a traditional element of both our national energy and environmental policies. We have built hydroelectric dams in the Tennessee Valley and in the Pacific Northwest at Federal expense. We created the Superfund to provide a national pool of funds to pay for the cleanup of hazardous waste. The same principle would apply to the problem of acid rain.

Without cost-sharing, Midwestern States like Missouri will face steep increases in electricity rates. Studies suggest that under the President's proposal electricity bills in Missouri could go up by as much as 20 percent. The impact of these rate increases on residential consumers, especially those on fixed incomes, is obvious. What might not be so obvious is the impact of such rate shocks on our industrial competitiveness.

The very States that would be hardest hit under proposed acid rain legislation are those States that have provided much of the traditional industrial base of our economy. Significant increases in energy costs will make it that much more difficult for U.S. businesses to compete with foreign businesses that are not forced to bear such costs alone. This economic impact will hurt not just the Midwest, but our entire national economy.

Mr. President, acid rain is indeed a serious national problem. I for one would like to see legislation to put this problem behind us. For too long the debate over acid rain has only divided regions of this country, allowing our precious national resources to be further damaged. It is time to take action. I commend the efforts of the President, the majority leader and the chairman of the Environmental Subcommittee for putting forth positive proposals to solve this problem. But much work remains to be done. I look forward to working with them to craft a truly national solution to this most important national problem.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri notes the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to speak for 10 minutes out of order as if in morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER] is recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes to speak out of order.

IN MEMORY OF A. BARTLETT GIAMATTI

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, it is with a mixture of sorrow and pleasure that I rise to pay tribute to the late A. Bartlett Giamatti, scholar, educator, family man, baseball fan, and commissioner. The sadness is self-evident because I speak in the nature of a memorial: We mourn the loss of a friend who will not walk among us again, and we will miss him.

But for anyone who knew Bart Giamatti—and I had the pleasure and privilege of getting to know him only in the last 2 years—this is a time of great celebration as well. For we are coming to the end of a memorable baseball season with the league championship games this evening and the World Series just ahead. And as our Nation's No. 1 fan, baseball fan, Bart Giamatti would have loved it, and indeed he did love it for the entirety of his all too brief life as baseball's commissioner.

Mr. President, I must tell you what a baseball season we have had.

Kevin Mitchell's bold attempt to become the only player to hit 50 home runs in a single season during this decade; the great Mike Schmidt's retirement; the inauguration of a new stadium in Toronto, Canada; the beginning of the end for the venerable Comiskey Park in Chicago; the improbable rise of the Orioles and Cubs, and the unlikely demise of the Mets and the Yankees; from the bright dawn of hope at spring training, to the crisp anticipation of four exciting pennant races as summer waned, all of which were only settled in this last week of the season. This has been a season to savor and that alone represents one of the finest and most fitting memorials to Commissioner Bart Giamatti.

Bart Giamatti's tenure as commissioner will be remembered, and properly so, for his efforts to protect the integrity of the game, and in this effort he was very much in the tradition of such distinguished predecessors as Kennesaw Mountain Landis and Bowie Kuhn. Certainly, this is the most fundamental duty of the baseball commissioner: to ensure that the game is fair, that contests are decided by honest effort on the playing field, that outcomes are honest. Without this assurance, no amount of promotion, no amount of gimmickry, no amount of chickens dressed up as men and/or men dressed up as chickens can maintain the kind of allegiance that baseball enjoys, and our national pastime would be little more in the public's mind than professional wrestling or the roller derby.

But, I believe another aspect of Mr. Giamatti's work as baseball commissioner will also stand the test of time and significance: his focus on the welfare of the fan. This concern is very evident in the following excerpt from a 1987 article he wrote for the Boston Globe.

> If you cannot park and be sure you or your car will be safe; or if you are ignored by ushers or unable to find a decent or thug-free restroom; or if you cannot watch a contest free from the constant assault of obscene language or a mindlessly insistent scoreboard, seemingly run by people who dare not let the contest speak for itself; or if your child cannot watch without passively ingesting marijuana clouds; or if there are fights in the stands and on the field or arena of play that subtly and insidiously fuel and feed off each other—then you begin to wonder why you came. As time goes on, the stands increasingly become the private preserve of the roughneck who came in order to drink too much, and for whom the contest is simply an outlet for the aggressive, ultimately antisocial, impulses that physical sports are meant to redirect into acceptable patterns.

He may have been the commissioner, the chief administrator of the great American game of baseball, but Bart Giamatti was first and foremost a fan. Listen to his own words from the same Boston Globe article I just quoted:

> Part of the purpose of going to a high school, college, or professional sports contest is to enjoy the gathering, to see and hear the crowd become a community, to cheer, to intervene vocally, to swap stories and pleasantries and opinions with those around you. It is a gathering of the tribe at one of its fundamental rituals and it is meant to provide pleasures as well as release from daily cares. It is meant to be strenuous and relaxing, a break from work, a time to pass onto the next generation lore and a way of looking at life and to teach a form of pleasure.

So all of us who consider ourselves baseball fans owe a special debt of gratitude to Bart Giamatti: He was our commissioner, not just for the owners or for the players. He knew the history of the game, the importance of its traditions, the value of its pursuit of excellence.

He also knew about its accountability for both individuals and the team. Baseball provides a true level playing field with very clear measuring sticks to characterize one's performance. There can be no dispute that Wade Boggs is an excellent hitter, or that Ozzie Smith is indeed a wizard on defense. We have not only our eyes to rely on, but cold, hard statistics to verify or refute claims of individual excellence or mediocrity.

Oh, but the Congress of the United States would reflect in this time of play office and World Series of what excellence and tradition and accountability could do for our Government.

For we are 100 individual players in the United States, but if we act as individual players, each refusing to work together as we present our programs of progress on behalf of the American people, we cannot succeed. We must ultimately work as a team, work through our committees, work through learning from each other, finding the best in what we recommend and trying to put that into coherent policy, if we are to progress as a Senate and as a Congress.

And just like a baseball team, if we rely only on individual accountability, we may dazzle with our statistics, we may dazzle with our rhetoric but we will not succeed in policies that reflect the best tradition of the people that we serve on behalf of our country.

The greatest goal for any baseball player is the World Series championship ring given to all—to all—of the players and the coaches, from superstars to scrubs who make up the championship team. And this reward is only possible through teamwork.

Baseball is the ultimate in team games with strong individual accountability. I do believe that there is a lesson here that we in Government at all levels might be able to learn.

I would be remiss if I did not end my halting words with the words of Bart Giamatti, because as all who knew him knew, he was a scholar, he was a man of learning, and his love of baseball and pursuit of excellence were reflected in the fact that he knew that without a love of learning, without a pursuit of education and scholarship, then excellence can never be truly attained in any walk of life.

Hear these words from a freshman address in September 1983:

> A liberal education rests on the supposition that our humanity is enriched by the pursuit of learning for its own sake; it is dedicated to the proposal that grows in thought, and in the power to think, increases the pleasure, breadth and value of life . . .
>
> I am puzzled . . . by the unexamined assumption that the 'real world' is always thought to lie outside or beyond the realm of education . . .
>
> There's nothing more necessary to the full, free and decent life of a person or of a people or of the human race than to free the mind by passionately and rationally exercising the mind's power to inquire freely.
> The joy of intellectual pursuit and the pursuit of the good and decent life are no more separable than on a fair spring day the sweet breeze is separable from the sunlight.

Finally, from his baccalaureate address at Yale in May 1985, this message to all of us who serve:

> My strong sense is that we have become increasingly divided as a people: The mutual distrust among racial and religious groups has only increased. Some say we have witnessed the licensing of personal selfishness. I believe we have further sunk into regional groups, language groups, splinter groups, special interest groups. Does the search for identity have to result in society's decomposition? Only when Madonna sings of being a "Material Girl" do we hear an anthem that knows no cultural boundaries.

We have, as a people, recently chosen the simple version of complex problems, sought the self-conferred right to common goals, exalted the resort to direct intervention over process and the patient workings of the law. "Go ahead, make my day," has entirely replaced "Have a nice day."

The fact is, we have been pushed and poked and pawed over as much as anyone can stand, and we have been swung on the pendulum of fashion out to paradise and back to basics as much in the last 25 years as anyone wants. We have, I think cooled all the resentments, studied all the nostalgias, burnished all the envies. We are approaching satiety with bumper stickers as guides to the meaning of life.

Those who have never seen a baseball game will still remember these words and the example of excellence that his life contributed. His final gift to the game of baseball is also a reason why sorrow should not turn into despair because it was Bart Giamatti who brought Fay Vincent in as deputy commissioner, handpicked him to be his successor, though no one could have known it would be so soon.

Mr. Vincent also is a student of the game. He comes with an enviable record in business and shares the commitment of Bart Giamatti, not only to baseball in its grandest traditions, but also its commitments to the fans.

We say goodbye to Bart Giamatti. And as he might have said, as a renaissance scholar, we sometimes forget that the old English "goodbye" is a contraction for "God be with you." God be with Bart Giamatti and with us all.

I yield the floor.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2:15 p.m. having arrived, the Senate, under the previous order, will return to executive session to resume the debate on the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain.

The nomination will be stated.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph Zappala, of Florida, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Spain.

The Senate resumed consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES].

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, yesterday we had an extended debate on the nomination of Mr. Zappala to be the Ambassador to Spain. I will now resume this debate with the expectation that later today we will be going to a vote on Mr. Zappala.

Time is not controlled so that any Members who may wish to speak on this matter will have a chance now, in the course of the time now before us. Obviously, if there are not many Members who wish to participate, we will go to a vote at an earlier rather than a later time.

Mr. President, I really want to underscore two basic points about what is occurring here and why it is so important. I want to use a chart, which I will put back on the easel in the back of the room.

One of the arguments we have been making is that there has been a marked shift, in the Bush administration, in the number of political appointees to ambassadorial positions as opposed to career appointees.

As the chart illustrates, we have gone back to the Kennedy administration, and looked at the first 9 months of every new administration—after an election or reelection—to examine the nature of the appointments made for country Ambassadors.

These are percentages here, and they show that, for instance, 39 percent of the Ambassadors appointed by President Kennedy were political; in other words, 61 percent were career.

Then, as you can see, tracing this pattern through: President Johnson, 28 percent; President Nixon, 37 percent; these are political appointees. President Nixon the second time, 36 percent; President Carter 39 percent; the second time it dropped to 30 percent. Of course, in the second term of a President, the approach is a little different approach because the administration had been in office for 4 years. Then we see this enormous jump in political nominations for country Ambassadors under President Bush.

It has jumped here to 62 percent political, which means only 38 percent would be career. President Bush and every preceding President from Kennedy forward had at least 61 percent of their nominations from the career service.

In our instance it went as high as 72 percent. That is the reverse of the current situation. Here you have a tremendous jump in the political nominations which have taken in the first 9 months under President Bush. This is a total of 58 nominees for country Ambassadors of whom 36—36 of the 58—are political appointees. I will have this chart put up the back so people can look at it at their leisure.

The second chart—just to make the point that it is not as though President Bush is appointing fewer or more—shows that the number of appointees he has made is roughly the same as Presidents Reagan, Carter, Nixon and Kennedy after their elections.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SARBANES. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Hawaii.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative session for a unanimous-consent item and that the Senate return to executive session at its conclusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senate will return to legislative session.

NATIONAL AMERICAN INDIAN MUSEUM ACT

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar Order No. 264, S. 978, a bill to authorize the establishment of a museum of the American Indian within the Smithsonian Institution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 978) to authorize the establishment within the Smithsonian Institution of the National Museum of the American Indian, to establish a memorial to the American Indian, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to consider the bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Committee on Rules and Administration jointly, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "National American Indian Museum Act".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) there is no national museum devoted exclusively to the history and art of cultures indigenous to the Americas, specifically Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts;

(2) although the Smithsonian Institution employs more than 6,000 people, operates 19 museums, galleries, and major research facilities, and sponsors extensive American Indian programs, none of its institutions are devoted specifically to Native American art and history;

(3) the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, located in New York City, has an unequaled assemblage of more than 1,000,000 Indian art objects and artifacts and is one of the largest of such collections in the world;

(4) the library of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, houses 40,000 volumes relating to the archaeology, ethnology, and history of Native American peoples;

(5) the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, of art, artifacts, specimens and books is inadequately housed in 3 separate facilities totaling 90,000 square feet, with 95 percent of the collection of art and artifacts stored in 20,000 square feet and the collection of books kept in a 15,000 square foot library;

(6) the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation needs a minimum of 400,000 square feet to adequately exhibit and store art and artifacts and to provide space for scholars and researchers;

(7) the bringing together of the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, and the Native American collection of the Smithsonian Institution would—

(A) create an institution whose capabilities for exhibition and research would be unrivaled in scope and would give all Americans the opportunity to learn of the cultural legacy, historic grandeur, and contemporary culture of Indians; and

(B) provide—

(i) a meeting place for scholars,

(ii) a significant, national facility for the exhibition of Indian art and artifacts,

(iii) a stage for the performing arts,

(iv) curation and other learning opportunities for Indians, and

(v) traveling exhibitions to communities throughout the Nation;

(8) approximately 300 skeletal remains of Indians collected from battlefields and burial grounds were sent to the Army Medical Museum by order of the Surgeon General of the United States Army and later transferred to the Smithsonian Institution where they are still stored;

(9) the Smithsonian Institution has acquired additional collections of Native American skeletal remains through—

(A) archaeological excavations, and

(B) donations from individuals and museums;

(10) these collections have been estimated to contain the remains of approximately 18,000 Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts and the existence of these collections has concerned many Indian tribes and bands and Alaska Native villages which are determined to provide an appropriate resting place for their ancestors;

(11) identifying the geographic and tribal origins of Indian and Alaska Native skeletal remains in the Smithsonian collections is essential to addressing these concerns; and

(12) an extraordinary site on the National Mall in the District of Columbia (U.S. Government Reservation No. 6) which has been reserved for the use of the Smithsonian Institution is available for construction of a suitable building to permanently house the collection of the National Museum of the American Indian.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the Senate is now considering S. 978, a bill to establish the National Museum of the American Indian within the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. President, as you know, this bill has been pending in the Congress for nearly 2 years while negotiations were proceeding to bring the priceless collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation to Washington. There were some legal obstacles which had to be surmounted, and many more political considerations which dictated a careful course of action, but I believe that the substitute amendment to S. 978 which I am now proposing that the Senate consider, addresses all of the difficult issues that required resolution before this legislation could go forward.

On May 8, 1989, the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution officially approved a memorandum of understanding with the trustees of the Heye Foundation of New York, and in so doing, enabled the action which I am hopeful that will be taken today by the Senate. More recently, the Smithsonian Institution reached agreement with the leaders of Indian nations that will provide a process for the inventory, identification, and repatriation, where appropriate, of the over 18,000 human remains of native Americans that are currently in the possession of the Smithsonian. This action allows communities of native Americans across the country the promise that one day their ancestors will finally be given the final resting place that they so deserve.

Indian support for a National Museum of the American Indian has been overwhelming and enthusiastic. Having spent a considerable time in Indian country over the last 3 years, this enthusiasm comes as no surprise to me, for there are few citizens in the United States whose greatness is less well known. This museum will serve as a living memorial to American Indian people—their historic grandeur and the rich cultural legacy that they have contributed to American society, as well as the magnificence of their contemporary culture. These are a people whose story needs to be told—not in the pages of history books where the legends of cowboys prevail—but in the seat of the Nation's Capitol and in museums and institutions around the country—so that all Americans might come to know that this Nation's first Americans not only enabled the troops of General George Washington to survive the winter at Valley Forge, but fought side by side with the American revolutionaries and indeed significantly influenced the outcome of the Revolutionary War. This museum will bring to the awareness of the American public that the U.S. Constitution and our democratic form of government was not derived from some exotic foreign land, but was modeled after the Iroquois Confederacy of Indian Nations. It will allow all Americans to know that proportionately more Indian people have served in the Armed Forces of this country than any other group of U.S. citizens. And most importantly, this museum will commemorate a culture of people upon whose values our society is based, and whose existence is alive and well and thriving.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis of the committee substitute be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the section-by-section analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF AN AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE TO S. 978, A BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NATIONAL MUSEUM OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN WITHIN THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Section 1. Section 1 provides that the Act may be cited as the National American Indican Museum Act.

Section 2. Section 2 contains the findings of Congress that there is no national museum devoted exclusively to the history and art of cultures indigenous to the Americas, specifically Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts; that although the Smithsonian Institution employs more than 6,000 people, operates 19 museums, galleries and major research facilities, and sponsors extensive American Indian programs, none of its institutions are devoted specifically to Native American art and history; that the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation of New York, has an unequaled assemblage of more than 1,000,000 Indian art objects and artifacts and is one of the largest of such collections in the world; that the library of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, houses 40,000 volumes relating to archaeology, ethnology, and history of Native American peoples; that the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, of art, artifacts, specimens and books is inadequately housed in 3 separate facilities totaling 90,000 square feet, with 95 percent of the collection of art and artifacts stored in 20,000 square feet and the collection of books kept in a 15,000 square foot library; that the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation needs a minimum of 400,000 square feet to adequately exhibit and store art and artifacts and to provide space for scholars and researchers; that the bringing together of the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, and the Native American collection of the Smithsonian Institution would create an institution whose capabilities for exhibition and research would be unrivaled in scope and would give all Americans the opportunity to learn of the cultural legacy and historic grandeur and contemporary culture of the American Indian people; and provide a meeting place for scholars, a significant, national facility for the exhibition of Indian art and artifacts, a stage for the performing arts, curation and other learning opportunities for American Indian people, and traveling exhibitions to communities throughout the Nation; that approximately 300 human skeletal remains of Indians were collected from battlefields and burial grounds and sent to the Army Medical Museum by order of the Surgeon General of the United States Army and were later transferred to the Smithsonian Institution where they are still stored; that the Smithsonian Institution has acquired additional collections of Native American skeletal remains through archaeological excavations, and donations from private individuals and museums; that these collections have been estimated to contain the remains of approximately 18,000 Indians, Eskimos, Aleuts and Native Hawaiians and the existence of these collections has concerned many Indian tribes and bands, Alaska Native villages, and Native Hawaiian families that are determined to provide an appropriate resting place for their ancestors; that identifying the geographic and tribal origins of Indians, Alaska Native, and Native Hawaiian skeletal remains in the Smithsonian collections is essential to addressing these concerns; and that an extraordinary site on the National Mall in the District of Columbia (U.S. Government Reservation No. 6) which has been reserved for the use of the Smithsonian Institution is available for construction of a suitable building to permanently house the collection of the National Museum of the American Indian.

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "National American Indian Museum Act".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) there is no national museum devoted exclusively to the history and art of cultures indigenous to the Americas, specifically Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts;

(2) although the Smithsonian Institution employs more than 6,000 people, operates 19 museums, galleries, and major research facilities, and sponsors extensive American Indian programs, none of its institutions are devoted exclusively to Native American art and history;

(3) the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, located in New York City, has an unequaled assemblage of more than 1,000,000 Indian art objects and artifacts and is one of the largest of such collections in the world;

(4) the library of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, houses 40,000 volumes relating to the archaeology, ethnology, and history of Native American peoples;

(5) the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, of art, artifacts, specimens and books is inadequately housed in 3 separate facilities totaling 90,000 square feet, with 95 percent of the collection of art and artifacts stored in 20,000 square feet and the collection of books kept in a 15,000 square foot library;

(6) the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation needs a minimum of 400,000 square feet to adequately exhibit and store art and artifacts and to provide space for scholars and researchers;

(7) the bringing together of the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, and the Native American collection of the Smithsonian Institution would—

(A) create an institution whose capabilities for exhibition and research would be unrivaled in scope and would give all Americans the opportunity to learn of the cultural legacy, historic grandeur, and contemporary culture of Indians; and

(B) provide—

(i) a meeting place for scholars,

(ii) a significant, national facility for the exhibition of Indian art and artifacts,

(iii) a stage for the performing arts,

(iv) curation and other learning opportunities for Indians, and

(v) traveling exhibitions to communities throughout the Nation;

(8) approximately 300 human remains of Indians collected from battlefields and burial grounds were sent to the Army Medical Museum by order of the Surgeon General of the United States Army and later transferred to the Smithsonian Institution where they are still stored;

(9) the Smithsonian Institution has acquired additional collections of Native American human remains through—

(A) archaeological excavations, and

(B) donations from individuals and museums;

(10) these collections have been estimated to contain the remains of approximately 18,000 Indians, Eskimos, Aleuts, and Native Hawaiians and the existence of these collections has concerned many Indian tribes and bands, Alaska Native villages, and Native Hawaiian families that are determined to provide an appropriate resting place for their ancestors;

(11) identifying the geographic and tribal origins of Indian and Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian human remains in the Smithsonian collections is essential to addressing these concerns; and

(12) an extraordinary site on the National Mall in the District of Columbia (U.S. Government Reservation No. 6) which has been reserved for the use of the Smithsonian Institution is available for construction of a suitable building to permanently house the collection of the National Museum of the American Indian.

INDIAN HUMAN REMAINS

SEC. 9. (a)(1) Subject to the provisions of this section and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Board of Regents shall, in consultation and cooperation with traditional Indian and Native Hawaiian religious leaders and tribal government officials, initiate a process for the inventory of Indian and Native Hawaiian human remains and funerary objects in the collection or control of the Smithsonian Institution to identify, to the fullest extent possible, the geographic and tribal origins of such remains and objects. The identification of the human remains and funerary objects shall be based upon the best available scientific and historical documentation.

(2) If the identification process conducted under paragraph (1) has established by a preponderance of the evidence the Indian tribal origin of any particular human remains or funerary objects, the Board of Regents, as soon as possible, shall cause the affected Indian tribe or tribes to be notified of such identification.

(3) If the identification process conducted under paragraph (1) has established by a preponderance of the evidence the geographic origin of any particular human remains or funerary objects of Native Hawaiians, the Board of Regents, as soon as possible, shall cause notice of such identification to be made to a Native Hawaiian organization which has been certified by the Governor of the State of Hawaii as the appropriate entity to receive such notification.

(b)(1) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that human remains in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution are of a particular Indian, or are of an individual who was culturally affiliated with a particular Indian tribe, the Board of Regents, upon request of the known descendants of such Indian, or such Indian tribe, as the case may be, shall expeditiously return such remains, and any funerary objects associated with such remains, to such descendants or Indian tribe.

(2) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that human remains in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution are of a particular individual who is believed to be Native Hawaiian, the Board of Regents, upon the request of the known descendants of such individual, shall expeditiously return such remains, and any funerary objects associated with such remains, to such descendants.

(3) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that funerary objects in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution, not associated with any human remains, were removed from a specific burial site of an individual culturally affiliated with a particular Indian tribe, the Board of Regents, upon the request of such Indian tribe, shall expeditiously return such objects to such Indian tribe.

(4) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that funerary objects in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution, not associated with any human remains, were removed from a specific burial site of an individual believed to be Native Hawaiian, the Board of Regents, upon the request of the descendants of such individual, shall expeditiously return such objects to the descendants.

(c)(1) Within 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall establish a committee to monitor and review the implementation of the inventory and identification process required under subsection (a) and the restoration activities required under subsection (b).

None of the persons appointed to the committee shall be Federal employees or officials or be affiliated with the Smithsonian Institution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE].

The amendment (No. 911) was agreed to.

Mr. McCAIN. I rise in strong support of S. 978, a bill to establish the National Museum of the American Indian under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution.

I wish to commend the distinguished chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, Senator INOUYE, for his vision, leadership, and skill in developing this legislation. For the past 3 years he has spent enormous amounts of time and energy to resolve seemingly irreconcilable differences and points of view in order to achieve a genuine consensus among all of the interested parties.

In this particular instance, I think I can speak on behalf of all native Americans who express their deep and heartfelt appreciation for Chairman INOUYE's efforts—without which this day would not be a reality.

Mr. President, as we all know, our Nation has been greatly enriched by its Indian citizens. There is no facet of our daily lives which is untouched by the past and present contributions of native Americans. We are unique among the nations of the world in our policies with regard to Indian peoples. While our policies have not always reflected well upon our Government, in general we have endeavored to treat the tribes fairly, to respect their sovereign prerogatives, and to appreciate the cultural diversity they embody. I believe that the National Museum of the American Indian will stand as a monument not only to the greatness of the Indian people, but also as a constant reminder of our national commitment to honor the existence of the tribes.

The museum's overall value and purpose was best expressed by Senator INOUYE who said:

This museum will be a living memorial dedicated to honor the magnificent contributions that native Americans have made to our society. It will provide an opportunity for all Americans to learn not only of the historic grandeur and the rich cultural legacy that the ancestors of today's Indian people have brought to us, but also a relevant and current manifestation of the contemporary culture of American Indians and Alaskan Natives.

Perhaps most importantly, with our eyes toward future generations, this museum will foster a sense of self-esteem and pride in Indian children—to know that they came from a great and proud heritage, and that they are the chosen ones that will carry on the magnificent culture and traditions, the art and dance, and religion of their ancestors, and that American society will be enriched by their contributions, as it has been by the contributions of their forefathers.

Mr. President, I would also like to highlight a portion of the bill which contains an agreement by the Smithsonian Institution to inventory and repatriate the human remains of native Americans and the associated grave offerings currently within their possession. I am pleased to note that this agreement closely conforms to the repatriation process I called for in S. 1021, a bill to provide for the protection of Indian graves and burial grounds. While my bill would extend coverage to all Federal agencies and to State and private institutions receiving Federal funds, I think the Smithsonian agreement is an important first step. It sends a clear signal to those in the museum community who have dismissed repatriation as a transitory issue that they would be wise to carefully consider the bills currently before the Congress.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I would like to add my support for the National Museum of the American Indian Act. This bill represents years of negotiation about the future of the majestic Heye collection, which contains 1,000,000 American Indian artifacts. For near three quarters of a century, the collection has been housed at Audubon Terrace, located in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan. Regrettably, exhibition space at Audubon Terrace is inadequate. Only a fraction of the Heye collection is ever on exhibit, the remainder relegated to storage.

The grandeur of the Heye collection deserves a national forum, and this bill provides just that. It would establish a National Museum of the American Indian to be comprised of three separate facilities. Part of the collection would remain in New York—just as its founder George Gustav Heye desired—in the U.S. Custom House, located at One Bowling Green in Manhattan. It is a splendid building, befitting of the Heye collection's treasures.

The bulk of the collection will be displayed in a larger museum to be built on the Mall in Washington. This location, combined with the Custom House exhibition space, will ensure that millions more Americans will be able to see and learn of the rich and thriving culture of the American Indian. In addition, a storage and research facility will be constructed in Suitland, MD.

This legislation also recognizes the unique relationship of Audubon Terrace to the Museum of the American Indian. The collection's founder, George Gustav Heye, turned to philanthropist Archer Huntington in 1916 in search of an appropriate site for his collection. With the vision of establishing a cultural center comparable to Lincoln Center, Mr. Huntington offered Mr. Heye space at Audubon Terrace. Since that time, Audubon Terrace has been home to the fascinations and dream of Mr. Heye. As such, this legislation dictates that the Smithsonian maintain ties with Audubon Terrace by loaning exhibits and providing technical assistance to the successor of the Heye Foundation.

The significance of the Heye collection may not be understated. It includes artifacts which extend geographically from Point Barrow to Tierra Del Fuego: the entire western hemisphere. The collection extends from prehistoric to contemporary times, encompassing the great civilizations of the new world—the Incas, Aztecs, and Mayans—to remote forest tribes in the Amazon and to Eskimos in the Arctic.

George Gustav Heye began collecting in 1897, employing scores of anthropologists to direct expeditions all over the American continent until his death in 1957. He managed to obtain the wampum belts that William Penn received from the Lenape Tribe to secure the bargain he made for Pennsylvania; the rifles which the U.S. Army took away from Geronimo, Rain-in-the-Face, Chief Joseph Nahche, and Sitting Bull, and scores of other artifacts.

Kevin Wallace of the New Yorker expressed it best when he wrote in 1960, "The most remarkable aspect of the Heye collection is its comprehensiveness; it is so complete, in fact, that in many cases a student seeking a Ph.D. in the field of Indian material culture not only could do all his field work within New York City, but might have no other choice."

I believe that the establishment of a National Museum of the American Indian is long overdue. I eagerly anticipate the day that George Gustav Heye's gift to the Nation will be displayed in a manner reflective of the great living culture of the American Indian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments? If not, the question is on agreeing to the the committee substitute amendment, as amended.

The committee substitute amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments?

If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I would simply like to recognize the outstanding work that the distinguished senior Senator from Hawaii has done on this issue. It was long overdue and it will be a very fitting tribute to native Americans. It is a very important issue to them all. I salute him for his efforts in bringing this to pass.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, if I may, on behalf of the first Americans of this land, I thank the Senate and the Congress for its support.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, the Senate will return to executive session to resume consideration of the nomination of Mr. Joseph Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain.

Mr. SARBANES is recognized.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, as I was pointing out earlier on the charts, there has been this marked shift in the number of political appointments under the Bush administration in comparison with previous administrations at this point in the first year after their election.

The question then arises: What has happened? Why is it that we have had such a tremendous jump in the number of political appointees? I think probably the answer to that question is to be found in an article which appeared in the New York Times on February 20 of this year, headlined "Ex-Finance Chairman Complains Few Jobs Go to Bush Fund-raisers."

That article reads:

Robert A. Mosbacher, who was finance chairman of President Bush's campaign, says he is distressed that more campaign fundraisers have not been rewarded with political appointments.

He then went on to say that he planned to bring the issue to the attention of White House personnel officials and that he hoped to speak directly to Mr. Bush about it.

The article goes on to say:

The Commerce Secretary, who ran the Bush fundraising effort in the primaries and the Republican Party's drive to raise millions of dollars from wealthy donors, said there were "several hundred" fundraisers who deserved appointments to ambassadorships, sub-Cabinet posts or lower level jobs on commissions who were being neglected. The campaign had a national finance board of some 350 people in the primaries, and for the general election, 249 individuals and corporations gave at least $100,000 apiece to the Republican Party.

"Quite a high percentage of those who have been helpful haven't gotten anything—at least 50 percent," Mr. Mosbacher said.

He then goes on to talk about others that were interested in serving, how opportunities had to be found for them. And he concludes by talking about one lady who had been a very diligent fundraiser. "By all standards she deserves something," Mr. Mosbacher said, "She raised a lot of money, worked hard."

Mr. President, I am not trying to argue that the people who have been politically active and made significant donations ought not to be ambassadors or ought not to be able to serve in the administration. All I am saying is that that should not be the sole reason for their being nominated to responsible positions. There ought to be other dimensions to their experience, abilities, and qualifications which would warrant one, upon looking at their record, to say, "There is a basis here for naming this person to be an ambassador, and the appointment is not being done solely to reward a large campaign contributor."

Unfortunately, that is precisely what has happened under this administration. We are now confronted with a situation in which primacy is being given to campaign and fundraising involvement over legitimate qualifications. A person's contribution to the campaign is, really, the basis for his or her selection to be an ambassador. I submit that close inspection of many of the résumés submitted to the Senate, the résumés, that is, which help to make up the large jump in political appointments, leads to the conclusion that, in too many cases, large donations to political campaigns or successful fundraising activity are the only reason for the nomination.

In fact, there is a provision in the Foreign Service Act which states that contributions to political campaigns should not be a factor in the appointment of an individual as a chief of mission. It should not be a factor, one way or the other. Yet we are confronted with a number of nominees who demonstrably have no qualification other than large campaign donations.

The process has deteriorated badly. The Presidential certification of demonstrated competence is required under the law to be submitted with every nomination. Despite the provision in the statute which says, "Contributions to campaigns should not be a factor in the appointment of an individual as a chief of mission," such political donations are set out in the certification of competence as the main reason why this person has been nominated. This procedure is directly contrary to the provision of the statute.

In the case of Mr. Zappala, whom we are now considering to be Ambassador to Spain, let me simply read the main paragraph in his so-called certification of demonstrated competence.

Mr. Zappala was National Finance Co-Chairman for the American Bicentennial Presidential Inaugural and Chairman of the Florida Victory Committee. Formerly Mr. Zappala was on the George Bush for President National Steering Committee in 1988 and the National Finance Committee Co-Chairman for the State of Florida as well as National Co-Chairman for the Republican National Committee's Team 100.

This is a group of those who gave more than $100,000 last Presidential campaign.

Mr. Zappala was also chairman of George Bush for President, 1979.

I was struck yesterday by what my colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina, said in setting out in the RECORD Mr. Zappala's qualifications. He was addressing the question of why should this person be an ambassador; in this instance, why should he be an ambassador to a country as important to our interests as Spain. Spain is a nation of great economic, political, and strategic importance and significance, as I tried to detail yesterday.

Yet in support of the case for Mr. Zappala, we have the following long statement in the RECORD. I read this in the context of the relevant statute, which says, Contributions to political campaigns should not be a factor in the appointment of an individual as a chief of mission.

Let me just quote this now. This is what the distinguished Senator from North Carolina had to say, amongst other things, about Mr. Zappala.

Mr. Zappala's civic action has also extended to the promotion of political activity among citizens, both through political organization and through fundraising. These activities deserve special notice. He has had a long personal relationship with George Bush. He was active both nationally and statewide on behalf of the George Bush for President campaign, dating as far back as 1979. In that year, Mr. Zappala was the finance co-chairman in Pinellas County, FL, of the first George Bush for President campaign. He co-chaired the first Florida fundraising for the Bush campaign in this year as well. Mr. Zappala was also among the State finance chairmen who met in Chicago with the candidate and then campaign manager, Jim Baker—

I might add parenthetically, now the Secretary of State—to assist in establishing one of Mr. Bush's first national fundraising efforts. Mr. Zappala also assisted with fundraising for the Fund for America's Future, a multicandidate political action committee established by Mr. Bush in 1985.

After the commencement of the 1988 George Bush for President campaign, Mr. Zappala served prominently on the National Finance Committee as co-chairman of the Republican National Committee's Team 10.

By the way of explanation, this is the group that gave more than $100,000; some 249 people.

He currently serves as the national co-chairman of finance for the American Bicentennial Presidential Inaugural and as chairman of the Florida Victory Committee.

Mr. President, it is getting dangerously close to where we are simply going to say: Mr. So-and-So gave $185,000 in the last political campaign, or $132,000, or $218,000, and therefore has been nominated to be the Ambassador to country x.

I think we have to bring a halt to this practice. We have here a nominee who does not speak Spanish. He has had no international or foreign policy experience. He has been successful in the condominium business in Florida, that is true. My own impression of him from the hearing and from what I hear is that he is a fine person. These arguments are in no way directed at Mr. Zappala personally.

But in terms of qualifications to be an American Ambassador, and in particular to be ambassdor to a country as significant to our interests as Spain—a country in which we have a very broad security interest, an important NATO ally, a country that has a leading role to play in the Spanish-speaking world and with influence throughout Latin America—it seems to me that to send this nomination is an indication that we are really not serious about our relationship with Spain or about addressing many of the critical issues on the international agenda.

Sending an ambassador who possesses no obvious qualifications for a post conveys a very unfortunate message to the country involved. It says, in effect, that our relationship is not important enough to require an able representative of our country. In many respects it says we value the country's climate more than its respect and friendship. And to the world at large it says the United States is not serious about diplomacy, that America places a higher premium on political rewards than on furthering its interests abroad.

No other major industrial country appoints its ambassaors in this way. Countries who send ambassadors to the United States pick them very carefully, to make sure that they are people of first-rank quality and ability and experience. The United States should do no less.

I think it is interesting, in the instance of Mr. Zappala, that two of the leading newspapers in his State, the St. Petersburg Times and the Miami Herald, have editorialized against his nomination.

I made reference yesterday to the St. Petersburg Times. Let me just quote from the last paragraph of that:

In the past, some new ambassadors' lack of preparation for their jobs has been offensive to host countries and has prevented our government from taking advantage of important diplomatic opportunities. Whether political appointees or career diplomats, our ambassadors should possess the same qualifications that we have come to expect of foreign diplomats serving in this country. Otherwise, we run the risk of creating touchy situations that even successful St. Petersburg developers aren't capable of getting us out of.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that entire editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Petersburg Times, Feb. 18, 1989]

THE INTERNATIONAL LANGUAGE

According to U.S. Rep. C. W. Bill Young, St. Petersburg developers Mel Sembler and Joseph Zappala have all sorts of qualifications for their new jobs as U.S. ambassadors to Australia and Spain, respectively.

"Australia is so much like the United States, and Mel Sembler certainly knows his way around the United States," Young said. "He is certainly able to communicate, which is one of the essential requirements of diplomacy." Young had similar praise for the diplomatic skills of Zappala, who he said "has handled a lot of touchy situations in his business life."

Sembler and Zappala may turn out to be excellent ambassadors, and their appointments by President Bush undoubtedly bring prominence to St. Petersburg. However, their selections had nothing whatsoever to do with their ability to find their way around, or to communicate, or to handle touchy situations.

Actually, that's not entirely true. Sembler and Zappala know their way around the power structure of the national Republican Party, and they know how to communicate in the international language: money. They were members of "Team 100," a group of donors who contributed at least $100,000 each to the Republican Party during last fall's campaign. They also served as co-chairmen of the national committee that raised $20-million to help pay for the Bush inaugural. The services rendered by Sembler and Zappala add up to serious qualifications for political appointment.

The practice of making ambassadorial appointments based on politics is neither new nor necessarily bad. Some political appointees with no previous diplomatic experience turn out to be excellent ambassadors. For example, former U.S. Sen. Mike Mansfield turned out to be an inspired choice as ambassador to Japan.

On the other hand, some career Foreign Service officers turn out to be inappropriate choices for particular assignments. John Negroponte, most recently U.S. ambassador to Honduras, has become a controversial choice as our new ambassador to Mexico because of his previous involvement with the Contra guerrillas fighting the government of Nicaragua. His predecessor in Mexico City, John Gavin, an old Hollywood friend of President Reagan's won generally high marks for his diplomatic performance.

However, an overabundance of politically based ambassadorial appointments can cause problems. First, an influx of political appointees can harm the morale of career Foreign Service officers better qualified for diplomatic duty. The percentage of political appointments rose from about 25 percent to 40 percent during the Reagan years, with a concomitant decline in ambassadorships awarded on merit. That percentage may go even higher with President Bush's new appointments.

Of course, the real risk is that some political appointees can harm American interests because they lack the backgrounds and abilities needed to articulate and implement U.S. policy. Our new ambassador to Italy, another political ally of the new president, does not speak fluent Italian. Zappala, whose Spanish is similarly rudimentary, does not claim to be particularly familiar with the recent history of Spain's ambivalent political and military relationship with the United States and the rest of Western Europe.

In the past, some new ambassadors' lack of preparation for their jobs has been offensive to host countries and has prevented our government from taking advantage of important diplomatic opportunities. Whether political appointees or career diplomats, our ambassadors should possess the same qualifications that we have come to expect of foreign diplomats serving in this country. Otherwise, we run the risk of creating touchy situations that even successful St. Petersburg developers aren't capable of getting us out of.

Mr. SARBANES. Second, in the Miami Herald of yesterday, the editorial reads as follows:

Unqualified Envoys. Now Bush Slights Spain.

Let me just read from this editorial in part:

That nomination—

meaning the nomination of Mr. Zappala—on which the full Senate will vote this week, forms part of a disquieting pattern. Like too many other Bush nominees to critical embassy posts, Mr. Zappala merely distinguished himself during the past Presidential campaign as a remarkably successful fund raiser. He can't speak Spanish. He is expert neither in Iberian affairs nor in international relations, he wholly lacks diplomatic experience.

That's troubling, Spain is an important U.S. ally, and Section 304 of the Foreign Service Act expressly advocates that U.S. ambassadors to such key nations have knowledge of the host country. The act also states that "contributions to political campaigns should not be a factor in the appointment." Mr. Zappala meets neither standard. The Senate should tell the President so and urge him to heed Section 304.

Granted Presidents have—and indeed should have—a free hand in nominating envoys to carry out their foreign-policy objectives. Therefore, the Senate is—and indeed should be—loath to reject a nominee simply because he is unqualified.

Yet the Constitution gives the Senate the duty to advise the President on appointments, and the power to reject them. The Senate should at least tell Mr. Bush that he disserves himself by nominating unqualified persons to be ambassadors.

Presidents historically have rewarded political allies and friends with prestigious ambassadorships. That in itself is not always objectionable, and many political appointees have proved excellent. But Mr. Bush has been unduly, even carelessly, profligate in his ambassadorial nominations.

That is one reason that the career Foreign Service suffers from widespread demoralization, and allies such as Spain, Italy, Australia, or Venezuela may feel slighted and undervalued when they're sent unqualified U.S. envoys. The Senate would do well to advise the President of this.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full editorial from the Miami Herald of Monday, October 2, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Miami Herald, Oct. 2, 1989]

UNQUALIFIED ENVOYS

The standards for nomination set by the current Administration represent a sharp decline from those of previous Administrations. With this terse statement, a group of Democratic senators headed by Paul Sarbanes of Maryland sharply summarized their dissent from the Foreign Relations Committee's 10-9 approval of President Bush's nominee as ambassador to Spain last July. The nominee is Joseph Zappala, a prominent St. Petersburg developer.

That nomination, on which the full Senate will vote this week, forms part of a disquieting pattern. Like too many other Bush nominees to critical embassy posts, Mr. Zappala merely distinguished himself during the past Presidential campaign as a remarkably successful fund raiser. He can't speak Spanish. He is expert neither in Iberian affairs nor in international relations. He wholly lacks diplomatic experience.

The Senate should tell the President so and urge him to heed Section 304.

Granted, Presidents have—and indeed should have—a free hand in nominating envoys to carry out their foreign-policy objectives. Therefore, the Senate is—and indeed should be—loath to reject a nominee simply because he is unqualified.

Yet the Constitution gives the Senate the duty to advise the President on appointments, and the power to reject them. The Senate should at least tell Mr. Bush that he disserves himself by nominating unqualified persons to be ambassadors.

Presidents historically have rewarded political allies and friends with prestigious ambassadorships. That in itself is not always objectionable, and many political appointees have proved excellent. But Mr. Bush has been unduly, even carelessly, profligate in his ambassadorial nominations.

That is one reason that the career Foreign Service suffers from widespread demoralization, and allies such as Spain, Italy, Australia, or Venezuela may feel slighted and undervalued when they're sent unqualified U.S. envoys. The Senate would do well to advise the President of this.

Mr. SARBANES. I note for the RECORD two of the leading newspapers in Mr. Zappala's own State, the Miami Herald and the St. Petersburg Times, have editorialized against him.

Mr. President, one other thing that was mentioned in the Miami Herald editorial was the demoralization of the career Foreign Service, and I want to address this point for just a second. We try to attract very bright, able young people into the career Foreign Service. We subject them to an intensive screening and examinations for which they have to prepare. We try to make it rigorous so that many candidates are not even accepted because, the argument goes, we need the best we can find in order to serve the Nation. A career Foreign Service officer then has to go through a process over the years of working his or her way up through the diplomatic corps and, hopefully, eventually, to become an ambassador, which represents the pinnacle of that career.

What lesson do we hold up to these people if most ambassadorships are then closed to them? Thus far in this administration, 62 percent of the appointments made by this President to be country Ambassadors have come from outside of the career service.

Second, these political appointees are then backed up, and supported when they go to the Embassy, by career people. What message of demoralization does it send to the career people in an embassy if the person they are backing up has been named Ambassador not because of some distinguished public service, not because of some extensive experience in international matters, but simply because of heavy political involvement and especially a large campaign contribution?

It is one thing to be a career person serving in an embassy and to have the former distinguished majority leader of the U.S. Senate, Senator Mike Mansfield, come, as he did, to Japan to be the Ambassador Mike Mansfield had years of distinguished public service, a deep involvement in international issues—which actually preceded his service in the U.S. Senate, when he served as a professor of international relations in his home State. Or, Arthur Burns, who went to be Ambassador to West Germany. He had been Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. He was able, obviously, to bring a lifetime of experience to his responsibilities, or David K. Bruce, one of our most distinguished Ambassadors.

It is one thing to ask career people to serve under such an ambassador. It is another thing for them to serve under an ambassador who brings no broader dimensions to the job, where it is clear on the record that the reason for the appointment is large political contributions and, but for those contributions, the nomination would never have been made.

That, I submit, has a demoralizing influence on the career service. The eventual result will be that we will not be able to attract or keep in the career service the very best people. Eventually, we will reach the point when political people are sent abroad, as ambassadors that, instead of having a first-class embassy staff to back them up, it will be second or even third-class.

No other major country conducts its business that way and I strongly submit we should not be doing so, either.

A very interesting article by Ronald Spiers, who retired several months ago as a senior member of the U.S. Foreign Service and is now the United Nations Under Secretary General for Political Affairs, appeared on the op-ed page of the Washington Post not too long ago. It is entitled "Trashing The Foreign Service."

In that article, he talked about departing "with a deep unease about the future of our country's diplomatic establishment." He then talked about the way these political ambassadorial appointments are made, and said, "We wouldn't treat our military so contemptuously."

Actually, there was a time when generals were picked on a political basis. They brought political influence to bear on a President, and they were given military assignments, and the Nation paid grieviously for it. I do not know of anyone today who would for a moment suggest that large campaign contributors should be rewarded with military appointments. Is there anyone who asserts that simply because some one has been a large campaign contributor, or has "people skills," that that person ought to assume a military command? And yet we treat these ambassadorships as though no skill or talent is required, even though under current circumstances they often face very significant dangers. In fact, since the Korean War, more ambassadors have been killed on duty than all the admirals and generals combined.

Mr. President, this politicalization of ambassadors, which has accelerated under the Bush administration, is a matter I think the Senate needs to address. That is why we have brought this issue to this body. It was only after seeing nominee after nominee come before the committee, and after reviewing records which showed really nothing except a pattern of heavy political involvement, that it seemed clear to me that something needed to be said about it.

The New York Times earlier in the summer wrote an editorial entitled "Trivializing Ambassadors." It says, in the lead paragraph:

> Presidents and Congress have a habit of rewarding fat cats and cronies with foreign embassies, of treating many ambassadorial appointments as if they don't much matter in representing American interests and values. But they do matter, sometimes critically. * * * Dispatching a lightweight or inexperienced envoy sends a message of unconcern verging on contempt.

The editorial then goes on to make the important distinctions which we have been trying to make on the floor. First of all, that "no one argues the country would be better served if all Ambassadors were professional diplomats." Not even the career Foreign Service people argue that. They accept the proposition that some ambassadors should come from outside the career service. They only insist that such ambassadors meet a high standard; that it be apparent on the face of it that they are being chosen because there is a record of distinction which warrants the selection.

This editorial makes the point that "Presidents need considerable latitude in selecting" their ambassadors, but it also goes on to say that "advice and consent does mean something: the Senate has an obligation to hold Presidential nominees to rudimentary standards of competence." And it concludes in this instance that it would be "salutary for the Senate to reject" this nominee.

Mr. President, I think it is important again to stress not only the informal but almost dismissive manner in which the Senate in its role in considering and confirming nominees has been treated in this instance.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee submits a lengthy questionnaire to each nominee for Ambassador, to be answered and returned to the committee. We ask for a lot of biographical information, financial information. In that questionnaire there is a question appearing right at the end which says:

> Are there any factors other than the information provided above which particularly qualify you for the position to which you have been nominated?

Mr. Zappala replied to that:

> I am known as a coalition builder. I am able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthwhile civic, charitable, and political causes.

The same question appeared, obviously, in the questionnaire given to Mr. Sembler, a friend of Mr. Zappala's, also from Florida: "Are there any factors other than the information provided above which particularly qualify you for the position to which you have been nominated?" And Mr. Sembler responded, "I have been known as a coalition builder, able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthy civic, charitable and political causes."

It is the same answer with a couple of minor grammatical changes. We put different questionnaires to two separate nominees and we get back the same answer, saying that "I have been known as a coalition builder, able to organize. * * *" The Washington Post commented on this, saying, "Modular testimony, prefabbed by someone else, self-description. It doesn't inspire a whole lot of confidence. Can the would-be-Ambassadors be trusted to enter into dialog with their host governments if they apparently cannot be trusted to write a few lines on their own qualifications?"

Mr. PELL. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PELL. The Senator has cited a couple of times, I believe, the so-called statement of competence that is written by the State Department about each of the nominees. I am particularly interested in that statement of competence because it came out of legislation I introduced some years ago in an effort to try to heighten the competence of the nominees. But it has become really more an exercise in fiction rather than in descriptive writing. I was curious what the Senator's view was with regard to what we should do in the long run with these certificates of competence. Should we wipe them out entirely, leave them on the books or what would be the view of the Senator?

Mr. SARBANES. First of all, I commend the very able Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, for the provisions that he put into the law. I think we should require a certification of demonstrated competence. It is my understanding that the certification for noncareer people—in other words, for the political appointees—is prepared by a White House liaison staff which is nominally in the State Department but responsive to the White House. In contrast, the career certification is prepared within the normal hierarchy of the State Department, and in fact the career people go through a very rigorous screening process before they are nominated to be an ambassador. They are reviewed by an ambassadorial board within the Department, but they are screened by the personnel office before they are even presented to the ambassadorial board. For the political nominees, apparently the certifications are done by a White House liaison staff, and this White House liaison staff, in part I think because there is nothing else to put in the certification of diminished competence with respect to some of these political nominees, has been writing lengthy statements about their financial contributions, which the law says are not even to be considered.

Since we have called them on this and brought them up short, we have noticed that these certificates are being written somewhat differently. So the authors are not being as obvious or apparent about the fundraising and contributions. Obviously, we will need to look behind the certifications. But this is an insult to the process which the very able Senator had established in the law. They are just making a mockery of the process.

Mr. PELL. The Senator would leave it on the books and hope that the Department would pull up its socks and do a better and more accurate job in writing these certificates.

Mr. SARBANES. I think the Senate ought to help them pull up their socks by rejecting some of these nominees. We need to send a very strong message to the administration that if they continue along this path, they are going to encounter difficulty time after time in the U.S. Senate, that we are not content with allowing the ambassadorial ranks to shift so heavily in a political direction, and we are not content with being sent nominees who have no demonstrable reason for appointment other than a large campaign contribution.

That is not good enough. These people are going to be called to account. We are going to probe into their backgrounds, their knowledge and experience.

It is my understanding that one result of these inquiries, which may be salutary consequence of all this, is that nominees to be ambassadors now realize that their hearings before the committee may in fact be rigorous, and they are starting to study the country to which they are going to be sent, in order perhaps to know something about it before they come up for a hearing.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator for his answer.

I would also add that this is a question of particular interest to me as I believe I am the only person in this body whose father was both a political appointee and passed the pre-Rogers Act diplomatic examinations; and I also have been both a political appointee by President Eisenhower at one point, and also have been a Foreign Service officer. I think that this whole exercise is going to have a beneficial effect in raising the quality, the caliber, the preparedness of the nominees who are sent up, and I congratulate the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I very much appreciate the Senator's comments, and I know of his own deep concern over the years for quality in the career Foreign Service, something, I think, in which our national interests are very much involved. We are going to have really competent, able people to represent us. We are not simply playing a game. This is serious business, and there are important interests involved.

Mr. President, let me make this point. I want to make clear that we are really arguing for a very reasonable position. We are really talking about balance. No one here is arguing for extremes. Even the Foreign Service people, who would seem to have the most obvious vested interest in holding all of these positions unto themselves, do not take that attitude.

Let me simply quote from an editorial, which appeared in the June 1989 issue of the Foreign Service Journal, titled "Qualified Ambassadors."

Are we in the Foreign Service the only ones concerned about the qualifications of ambassadorial appointees? It appears so. And when we sound the alarm, we are seen as interested only in job security for ourselves. But political ambassadors are not the problem. Ambassadors without qualifications are, be they political or career. The media treats the absence of qualifications lightly, with titters in the gossip columns. Congress, even those members who know better, shrugs and says nothing.

Maybe they are right. Maybe it is okay to sell our diplomatic posts abroad to the highest bidders, for the taxpayers to bear the burden of paying off political activists, and that American interests in Country X, Y, or Z, be damned. But we don't think so. Diplomacy is too important. We should practice it carefully and with skill and send out our very best to represent us. We recommend a quality control process for ambassadorial appointments, for both career and political.

The United States can no longer work its will through the sheer force of economic, political, and moral might. Our place in the scheme of things is affected by events and decisions in other countries. We are foolish if we do not seek every legitimate means to influence those decisions.

I ask unanimous consent that the full editorial be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Foreign Service Journal, June 1989]

QUALIFIED AMBASSADORS

Are we in the Foreign Service the only ones concerned about the qualifications of ambassadorial appointees? It appears so. And when we sound the alarm, we are seen as interested only in job security for ourselves. But political ambassadors are not the problem. Ambassadors without qualifications are, be they political or career. The media treats the absence of qualifications lightly, with titters in the gossip columns. Congress, even those members who know better, shrugs and says nothing.

Maybe they are right. Maybe it is okay to sell our diplomatic posts abroad to the highest bidders, for the taxpayers to bear the burden of paying off political activists, and that American interests in Country X, Y, or Z be damned. But we don't think so. Diplomacy is too important. We should practice it carefully and with skill and send out our very best to represent us. We recommend a quality control process for ambassadorial appointments, for both career and political.

The United States no longer can work its will through the sheer force of economic, political, or moral might. Our place in the scheme of things is affected by events and decisions in other countries. We are foolish if we do not seek every legitimate means to influence those decisions. World events touch everyone's job. Ask the steel workers, the UAW, and the farmers. Corporate board rooms understand the importance of the world to their welfare, and they are beginning to look to Washington for effective diplomacy.

How important is skilled diplomacy to reducing the threats of war, to having some impact on the international flood of illegal drugs, to the health of our world's environment? The list of international issues that are important to Americans now and which will be more so in the future is long.

How do we convince the people of a foreign country that we are serious in the pursuit of our country's objectives if the chief representative of the United States in that country can't speak the language, knows next to nothing about that country, and has no visible qualifications to represent the United States there? We can't.

AFSA urges the administration and Congress to consider whether the time has come to rethink the question of ambassadorial qualifications. Experience should have taught us the painful lesson that not just anyone is good enough to represent all of us. We, also, should care enough to send the very best.

Mr. SARBANES. I just quote a paragraph right toward the end of the editorial which says:

How do we convince the people of a foreign country that we are serious in the pursuit of our country's objectives if the chief representative of the United States in that country can't speak the language, knows next to nothing about that country, and has no visible qualifications to represent the United States there? We can't.

I agree that we cannot.

Mr. President, I have talked about not only the nonchalance, but the, in effect, lack of respect with which the committee's questionnaire was treated, in the sense that we get the same answer on two different questionnaires. It is incredible. It is the sort of incident for which a teacher in school would send the examination back or flunk the student. We are told casually of the identical answers, "What difference does it make? These people are close friends of the President. They have been large political contributors."

Secretary Mosbacher, who was the chief fundraiser for the Bush campaign, was complaining a while back that campaign fundraisers have not been rewarded with political appointments. Who pays the price for this? The American people pay the price for it. The United States pays the price for it. It is the interests of our Nation which suffer. The question is not only whether one of these amateurs, without any dimensions that would warrant selection, goes and makes some serious mistake that leads to an embarrassment, although that is generally the perspective in which this is viewed.

That is very obvious when it happens, and of course it has happened on occasion, much to the cost of our country. But there is another side to the problem, and it is this: Even if they do not make some serious mistake, their lack of skill and ability makes them unable in the course of representing our Nation to identify and exploit opportunities that may exist, and thereby enhance and further America's interests. In other words, we lose something on the positive side.

A good Ambassador, a really good Ambassador, does not only avoid making bad mistakes; a really good Ambassador is able to do a lot of positive things which enhance the position of the United States in the country to which he is accredited.

The Senate must keep foremost in its thinking, when asked to give its advice and consent to ambassadorial nominations, that our national interest is at stake—not a political interest, not a party interest, not a personal interest, but our national interest. These appointments must be taken seriously, and they ought not to be treated as political throwaways.

This process is deteriorating, and it is deteriorating badly. In my view, it has gone much too far. Now is the time to say "Stop." I urge the Senate to reject the nomination of Mr. Joseph Zappala to be the United States Ambassador to Spain.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES].

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I assume shortly we will be going to a vote. I do not know whether there are others who wish to speak. So I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield I think we have one speaker who is on his way, Senator MCCONNELL.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today in support of President Bush's nomination of Joseph Zappala as U.S. Ambassador to Spain. It is my opinion, and that of the majority of Senators on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, that Joseph Zappala is a fine nominee for this post.

Mr. President, Joseph Zappala may not be a veteran diplomat but he is a skilled businessman and community leader, accomplishments which share the diplomat's requirements for management, negotiating and analytical abilities.

Joseph Zappala has distinguished himself as an outstanding businessman. His track record in the business community is outstanding: chairman and chief executive officer of Joseph Zappala & Associates; chairman of Home Town Investors, Inc.; and member of the board of directors of First Union National Bank. He has demonstrated initiative in starting his own companies and imagination and skill in making them successful.

Mr. Zappala has committed his energy and abilities to improving our communities as well. His concern and efforts on behalf of America's youth is indeed commendable. Again his track record is impressive: cofounder and president of STRAIGHT, Inc., the Nation's largest drug treatment and rehabilitation program; and past chairman of the Pinellas Association for Retarded Children.

Joe Zappala has certainly gained from his business transactions, but he is a man with a strong desire to give back to his community and nation.

It seems to me that Joe's nomination is being unfairly attacked. His accomplishments as a businessman, his knowledge and love for America, and his leadership skills make him the prime nominee for Ambassador to Spain. Mr. President, why should a capable and successful businessman be denied the opportunity to serve his country? Because he is successful in his field? It seems to me some Members would view success and community commitment as criteria which eliminate your opportunity to serve and represent this country abroad.

I will vote to confirm Joseph Zappala's nomination. As a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it is my duty to examine the qualifications of the President's nominees and there is no doubt in my mind that Joe Zappala is qualified to serve his country and his President. No one will deny Joe Zappala made campaign contributions, but it was his contributions to the business world and to his community which made the difference to the President when he selected Mr. Zappala to serve and convinced me that he deserved my support. Joe is a remarkable individual and will serve with dedication and skill as our next Ambassador to Spain.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, earlier this year I voted for an amendment which would have expressed the Senate's desire to see a limitation on political appointments to the ambassadorial posts. While that amendment was not adopted, I believe it sensitized the administration to the importance of this issue and might, perhaps, have some impact on their behavior in the future.

While that amendment called for a reduction in political appointments, it implicitly recognized that some political appointments are perfectly appropriate and acceptable. The concern was not with the existence of political appointments but rather the extent of the political appointments being made.

All of this is, I think, relevant to the nomination of Mr. Zappala to serve as Ambassador to Spain. The fact that Mr. Zappala is a political appointee is not, in and of itself, a basis for disqualification. While we might wish that more professional people were nominated we have recognized that some political people can and will and even ought to be nominated. So we cannot reject this nomination on the basis of the fact that Mr. Zappala has no professional experience.

That forces us to examine Mr. Zappala's record. I have done that and I have met with Mr. Zappala. My conclusion is that there is nothing which disqualifies him for this post. That is not a ringing endorsement. It is not meant to be. But when I make an on balance assessment of Mr. Zappala's record, I can find nothing in it which would overcome the presumption, the deference, that we all agree ought to be paid to a President's choice to serve in an ambassadorial post.

I am bothered by the "duplication" in the papers that he and a friend filed with the Foreign Relations Committee. Mr. Zappala, however, explains that the duplication was an honest mistake; I find his explanation to be unsatisfactory but adequate. I am also troubled by Mr. Zappala's lack of fluency in Spanish; Mr. Zappala, however, told me that he recognizes the validity of that criticism and is now studying Spanish.

Against these concerns is a record of some substance. Mr. Zappala has significant managerial experience. Being in business does give people the kind of experience which is relevant to their ability to discharge public obligations. In addition, he does have a relationship with the President of the United States which can make him more effective than people who, on paper, would appear to be more qualified for this post than he. Based on these considerations, I intend to reluctantly vote for this nomination.

Let me make one closing comment Mr. President. While I disagree with his conclusions, I believe that Senator SARBANES has done us all a real service by opposing this nomination. He has put the administration on notice that we are concerned about their efforts to politicize the Foreign Service. He has made it clear that there have to be changes in the ratio of these appointments or there will be more fights about individual appointees. I may well join with him in future fights of this nature. But based on Mr. Zappala's record and based on signs that the administration is willing to take our concerns into account, I do not believe that this is the time to make that stand.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I have already risen in support of the nomination of Mr. Joseph Zappala to be United States Ambassador to Spain. I have indicated to my colleagues that Mr. Zappala has a lengthy list of civic and business achievements. I would like to share with my colleagues a letter that I have received from the St. Petersburg Area Chamber of Commerce highlighting its recommendation of Mr. Zappala on the basis of these achievements. I ask unanimous consent that the content of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. PETERSBURG
AREA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
St. Petersburg, FL, September 27, 1989.

Senator CONNIE MACK,
Hart Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MACK: The St. Petersburg Area Chamber of Commerce and its Board of Governors are honored and pleased to be able to recommend to you Mr. Joseph Zappala, ambassador-designate to Spain and Mr. Melvin Sembler, ambassador-designate to Australia. Both gentlemen represent the best in our community and have a long list of civic and business achievements.

Our understanding is that you will be voting on the ambassadorial appointments early next week and on behalf of the Chamber, we want you to know about the background and credentials of these two fine individuals.

Sincerely,

DAVID H. WILBANKS,
President.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I oppose the nomination of Joseph Zappala to be Ambassador to Spain. I do so not because of Mr. Zappala himself, but because I am concerned about the process of selecting ambassadorial nominees in the Bush administration.

Since taking office, President Bush has nominated a large number of political nominees to serve in our embassies abroad. Unfortunately, far too many of these nominees have been distinguished only by their ability to raise money for, or donate money to, political candidates. Indeed, the certifications of demonstrated competence submitted on behalf of these appointees have highlighted political fundraising activities, and pointed to these activities as evidence that a particular nominee is qualified to serve as an ambassador.

This trend is disturbing. We should not view every Embassy as a potential reward for political fundraisers. I hope the administration will think carefully before sending the Senate such nominees in the future. I hope the protest vote I am casting today sends a clear signal to the administration that it should end this practice.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the nomination of Joseph Zappala as Ambassador to Spain.

He is the President's choice, and a good choice. He is a person of unquestioned integrity, an outstanding businessman, and has been very active in civic and charitable affairs. Most important, he has the President's trust, and deserves the Senate's confirmation.

The questions raised about this nomination, ironically, have little to do with Joe Zappala, the man. No one that I know of has stood up and said Joe Zappala has done anything wrong. All he is accused of, is doing something some Senators on that side of the aisle do not like—giving generously to the Republican Party.

As far as I know, there is nothing in the Constitution or any law which says that automatically disqualifies any American for any public office.

And, as history tells us, every President since time immemorial—Democrat as well as Republican—has chosen to appoint some of those who have supported his candidacy to high Government positions, including ambassadorships. President Carter did that; President Kennedy did that; and so has every Republican President that I can remember.

So I hope we will decide this nomination on its merits—and not on the rather far-fetched proposition that being close politically to the President disqualifies you, while being far removed from any past connection to the President makes you the ideal candidate.

Mr. President, this is a matter of simple fairness. I hope the Senate will be fair—to the President and to Joe Zappala. I hope and trust we will overwhelmingly confirm this nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES].

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I wish to include in the RECORD a table which contains the numbers supporting charts that had been used earlier in my speech. They give percentage figures for political appointees made by President Bush as compared with previous Presidents beginning with John Kennedy.

I ask unanimous consent that that table be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Kennedy (first nine months of 1961)—64 Nominations total: 39 Career (61%); 25 Political (39%).

Johnson (first nine months of 1965)—39 Nominations total: 28 Career (72%); 11 Political (28%).

Nixon (first nine months of 1969)—70 Nominations total: 44 Career (63%); 26 Political (37%).

Nixon II (first nine months of 1973)—36 Nominations total: 23 Career (64%); 13 Political (36%).

Carter (first nine months of 1977)—59 Nominations total: 36 Career (61%); 23 Political (39%).

Reagan (first nine months of 1981)—57 Nominations total: 35 Career (61%); 22 Political (39%).

Reagan II (first nine months of 1985)—37 Nominations total: 26 Career (70%); 11 Political (30%).

Bush (first nine months of 1989)—58 Nominations total: 22 Career (38%); 36 Political (62%).

Covers bilateral appointments (country ambassadors) referred to Senate Foreign Relations Committee, January 20—September 30. Source: Senate Foreign Relations Committee Legislative Calendars; Principal Officers of U.S. Foreign Missions; Presidential Documents.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this table is an update of the table that appears on page 12 of the committee report. At the time the committee report was prepared, we covered only the first 7 months. We now have covered the first 9 months of this administration, during which 58 persons have been nominated to be country ambassadors by President Bush. Of the 58, 36 are political, 22 are career.

So 62 percent of those nominated by President Bush to be country ambassadors are political. The highest percentage by any previous President was 39 percent—39 percent political. President Bush has not only carried it over the halfway mark but well above the halfway mark—almost to the two-thirds mark—and 62 percent of his nominees are political.

We intend to continue to scrutinize these appointees and continue to make the point that the current ratio is having a demoralizing impact on the career Foreign Service, both because of the numbers and because of some nominees' qualifications.

In this instance we are sending an ambassador to Spain who does not speak Spanish. He is going to the premier Spanish-speaking country in the world. He is a person without any international or foreign experience and, really, a limited record of service in his community. I do not deny that he has been very successful financially, and I do not deny that he is a fine person individually and that he has a deep love for his country. But there are literally tens of millions of Americans who meet that requirement. That does not seem to me sufficient to warrant being sent as an ambassador to a country where we have very high interests and very high stakes.

I simply close with the observation that I made before: The national interest is at stake here, not a political interest, not a party interest, not a reward for political performance, not a personal interest, not a reward for friendship. These appointments need to be taken seriously. They are not simply political throwaways. We need to send people who can effectively represent the United States and enhance and advance our interest. I urge the Senate to reject this nomination.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Joseph Zappala, of Florida, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Spain?

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD] is absent because of death in the family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 79, nays 20, as follows:

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN].

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we are back again, as the presiding officer knows, on the question that the Senate has been dealing with for some time now and I suspect will be dealing with for some time to come.

As a consequence of the able leadership of the Presiding Officer, we were able to get the first real action on the drug strategy, the drug bill, the drug issue—it is referred to 100 different ways—but the effort of the U.S. Government, the Federal Government, to try to put in perspective what its aims, objectives and prognosis for progress are and what resources are necessary to make a dent in what I think all of us, Republican and Democrat alike, believe is the most vexing domestic problem that we face.

Mr. President, we are at the second piece of the compromise that the Chair led us to with the President, and that is we are at the place now where we are going to be debating and proposing amendments that relate to whether or not the strategy, the implementing legislation of the strategy, the goals of the strategy set out by the President are in fact adequate, need changing, need augmenting, need reducing, or whatever.

I welcome the chance to open what will be, I suspect, the first round of the debate on the President's strategy itself as opposed to how we would fund the moneys necessary for the war on drugs, the appropriation process we went through under the leadership of the Presiding Officer, the President of the Senate.

It has been suggested, not by my colleague from New Hampshire, but it has been suggested by many on both sides of the aisle, that there is really not any fundamental disagreement with the President's strategy; that is, how the President wishes to wage the war, what emphasis he places on what parts of the problem and who, State, local or Federal, is most responsible for what pieces of that strategy. We all know that there are in fact a number of choke points, if you will, in the war on drugs.

The first we offer to discuss is what can we do about impeding the flow of raw materials as well as the finished drug products from coming into this country, so-called interdiction.

Can we go one step back and can we make sure that we eliminate the product where it lay in the fields of Peru or Colombia or Afghanistan, whether it is a poppy plant or a coca leaf, straight through to whether or not the criminal justice system in the United States is equipped to handle the volume of work that is thrust upon it as a consequence of the drug trade and the crimes relating to drugs; down to what is probably the most controversial point whether or not it is in the interest of the United States and the citizens of the United States to expend significant amounts of money to attempt to treat, rehabilitate if you will, those who are already drug addicts; to what form of education is best for our children and when should it start and whether it should be within the public school or whether it should be primarily in the home?

There is a point I would like to make, at least speaking for the Senator from Delaware. I will not take the time now because I will go back to these charts in the back of the Chamber that set out, two of the goals that the President's strategy sets and against which the President believes we should measure our success or failure as a nation in dealing with the drug problem.

The Senator from Delaware will be introducing several amendments today that go to the goals that are set in the national strategy to fight the war on drugs. Are they sufficiently ambitious? For example, the President's goal is that we reduce the number of monthly users of drugs, the so-called casual user, by roughly 10 percent over the next 2 years. Is that ambitious enough? We should discuss that, and we will today.

As to the current adolescent drug use, the drug use among adolescents, is the reduction of that drug use over the next 2 years of 10 percent reduction sufficiently ambitious, or as a nation should we set a higher goal? Will we be satisfied? Will we consider it a success if the goal of the President's strategy were accomplished?

There are many other areas which I will discuss, but the point the Senator from Delaware wishes to make at this moment, and I will not take much longer, is that there is fundamental disagreement among many of us, I suspect on both sides of the aisle, with the President's strategy and his goals. The reason, when we wrote the so-called drug czar bill, that we required the drug director to set out in a written document what the goals of the program was so that we would have something to measure our success or failure against. Because, absent that, we end up measuring our success or failure with measures that bear no relationship to whether or not we are making progress.

For example, there was the largest drug seizure in the history of the United States of America that took place in Los Angeles just last week. A warehouse full of cocaine, 20 tons of it, if I am not mistaken, worth hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of millions and billions of dollars.

Prior to having a national drug strategy, those kinds of so-called busts were the only thing that we had to measure whether or not we were making progress, when in fact they are false measurements. Our police agencies should be complimented. They did a phenomenal job and it is important what they did.

The Director of the DEA and the Director of the FBI were before my committee this morning, the Judiciary Committee. They both acknowledged that the price of cocaine on the streets of America will probably not increase very much in the next week and in the next couple of months will probably have no impact.

So if that 20 tons of cocaine were, in the total scope of all the cocaine being smuggled into America and sold, a significant portion, you would expect the price of cocaine to go up. It would mean we are making great progress, we are putting a real dent in the supply. But if the price of cocaine on the streets of America does not increase significantly in the near term, it means that there are tens of other warehouses in America with 20 tons of cocaine in them, or 5 tons, or 15 tons, or 1 ton.

I see the distinguished Senator from Montana is here. He and I had a very good conversation off the floor the other night. We were talking about how rural States have changed. His State is not only rural but incredibly large. His State is becoming the "ice" capital of America. What "ice" is, "ice" is meth-amphetamine that is a synthetically produced drug that is like crack cocaine. It is smokable. His State and other Northwestern rural States are becoming the place from which the rest of America may be supplied so-called crank, which is like crack cocaine or cocaine itself—incredibly addictive, same properties, spawns the same violence, impacts upon the mind similarly.

And so the point the Senator from Delaware wants to make is this: When we wrote the so-called drug czar bill, the purpose of setting goals was to have a more reasonable means by which we could measure our success or failure. And the reason we needed that measure was not to hold an administration or a Congress or a party accountable for success or failure but to allow us for the first time to have some reasonable way in which we could determine whether or not we should reallocate our resources.

For example, if the goal was to interdict x amount of drugs coming across the border and we invested tens of billions of dollars to do it and we could not meet the goal, it would be clear that maybe there would be a better investment of those dollars somewhere else. Because this is going to be a changing picture. There are new organized crime units inside and outside this country, and there are new drugs with which we will have to deal.

Both of my colleagues, the three of us on the floor are all from rural States. Well, we are finding out little things like California, which has one of the largest agricultural industries in the world, not just the United States, in the world, its largest cash crop is marijuana. We are not importing it. We do not have to import it. We are importing but we do not have to import it. We grow it right at home in vast quantities. And, I might add, the grower does not even have to buy the land. He just goes out on Federal land and grows it.

So we are going to argue and debate the goals a little bit today. It seems to me that it should be clear that the disagreement with the strategy is over fundamentals and not funds; over beliefs and not budgets; and over design and not just dollars.

So today I will be offering some amendments. I will not do it at this moment because this is really the Bush package that will be introduced, or I should say the Dole package and managed by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. So I will be following up with amendments. But the amendments that I will be proposing will have as their purpose to illustrate and draw as starkly as I can the differences in philosophy and approach in the strategy the Senator from Delaware and many of my colleagues have with the President's strategy.

I will make one concluding comment before I yield the floor to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, and that is that this is really only the second round in this whole debate. The goal of the Senator from Delaware is for us to reach a point where we really do have a clear national consensus because this is not a Democratic issue or a Republican issue. This is an American issue. The scourge of drugs knows no party, it knows no income group, it knows no race, it knows no locality. It is a problem in rural Montana and Delaware as well as downtown Houston, New York, Los Angeles and Miami. There is no distinction made.

And so this is really a second step, because the President of the United States will be coming forward, through his drug director, Dr. Bennett, in February, with the second strategy. In fairness to the administration, the strategy which I have such stark disagreement with is only the first strategy that has been put forward.

So I will say forthrightly that I have two motives; one direct and one indirect. My direct motivation here today is to try to convince my colleagues in the Senate that we should change now some specific aspects of the strategy. My indirect motive is to have an indirect effect upon the formation of the next strategy that will be due in February.

So, although the Senator from Delaware has more than nine major amendments, he may not propose them all, and he may not ask for a vote on them all, even if he proposes them, because the real debate is going to come between now and February when the second major comprehensive strategy document is put forward.

So with that, let me conclude by suggesting that today we will be offering some specific amendments that go to the heart of our difference with the strategy that has been put forward by the administration. But we will, in the ensuing months, be laying out in much greater detail our differences in the hope that by the time the second strategy is put out, they will not be differences but we will have reached a consensus; and further, that we are talking about authorization, not appropriation, I say to the Presiding Officer, who is chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who knows much better than any of us on the floor.

If we change the strategy, to the extent the change has a price tag to it, we are going to have to—at some future date, if we pass it—find the money to fund it. When the President introduced his initial strategy and then the Senator from West Virginia, the Presiding Officer, came through with his major amendment to that strategy, everyone asked, where are we going to get the money?

We said we did not know. But if we adopt the strategy, we would do it under the leadership of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and with the help of the Senator from New Hampshire, who is also on the Appropriations Committee—I am not—you all came up with a way. We came up with a way.

So I say today to my colleagues, we may be passing amendments that reflect a difference in goal that impact upon dollars. This is an authorization. And, if we do, we will have to come back at another time in order to try to fund it. But that remains to be seen.

I yield to my colleague from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] is recognized.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, let me thank my friend, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for that statement. I am managing this bill, for the information of the Senator from Delaware, until Senator HATCH does arrive. He will then manage the bill for this side.

I will make a couple of observations on the remarks of the Senator from Delaware. Unquestionably, this is not a partisan issue. It is an issue in which there are many varying views on both sides of the aisle and, indeed, in the country.

If we talk to a group of law enforcement officials or a group of educators or a group of physicians or psychiatrists, and we talk about the drug problem, we will get myriad answers as to what the strategy ought to be. The Senator from Delaware is quite correct. This, the strategy that was set up by Director Bennett, represents the initial strategic position taken by the administration on how to deal with this problem.

The Senate already has changed that to some extent with an adjustment of funds to be appropriated for the drug fight. That, of course, was under the leadership of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from West Virginia.

As the Senator from Delaware stated, there will be a second strategy. It will be up here in February. I would predict, Mr. President, although there are far more pleasant things to talk about, we will be discussing the strategy and the funding on the problem of drugs in America for a decade to come. No one can put in stone a strategy today and assume that that strategy will not change based on experience, based on funding, and based on other factors.

So I am delighted that we have the opportunity, under the agreement that was previously worked out by the majority leader and the Republican leader, to start this debate today. I hope we can discuss the amendments of the Senator from Delaware in due course, move through them briskly, have good discussions, have votes on them, and have the Senate work its will on this legislation.

I hope we can do that at least before too many more hours toll.

Mr. President, I would like to offer several amendments which I do not believe are controversial and I believe have been cleared. If they have not been, we can discuss them here.

AMENDMENT NO. 910

(Purpose: To allow the Attorney General to take into account the ability to pay for drug test results by State and local governments)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Mr. DOLE and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] for Mr. DOLE, proposes an amendment numbered 910.

Add at the end thereof the following:

"(d) In issuing regulations pursuant to subsection (b) of this Act, the Attorney General shall also take into account the ability to pay for drug testing programs to be undertaken by the State and local governments."

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, the Republican leader offers this amendment. I believe that the concern is shared by all in this Chamber. We are going to start mandating certain kinds of testing. We are going to fund some of it but we are very concerned about the impact on State and local governments as to their ability to pay for that.

We have to be very careful that we do not place burdens on local and State governments that they can ill-afford. Certainly, that is true in every State in the Union. I know it is true in my State of New Hamphire. I am sure it is true in the Presiding Officer's State of West Virginia. This amendment is offered to that end. I will be offering a further amendment on that subject, and I believe the Senator from Montana has an amendment that he also believes is important on this subject. I do not know if that has been cleared on the other side or not. I thought it had.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN].

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it has been discussed. We have not reached an agreement. Let me speak to that for a moment. So, therefore, technically, I must say it is not cleared at this point.

One of the centerpieces of the national drug strategy put forward by the administration is an unspecified requirement. Let me be more precise. It is a requirement that is not fully articulated, requiring States to drug test everyone within their criminal justice system. That is, the moment someone is arrested on a criminal charge, any charge, he would be drug tested, straight through to probationer and parolee. If he was within the prison system, he would have to be tested. If he is convicted, he is put in prison. If he is in prison awaiting trial, he would have to be tested.

If he was sentenced to prison, he would have to be tested. If he was put on probation, he would have to be tested. Or if he was on parole, he would have to be tested. That is what it calls for.

Let me read more specifically. It says:

For targeted classes of arrestees, individuals in jails, prisons, and other correctional facilities, and persons on conditional or supervised release before or after conviction, including probationers, parolees, and persons released on bail.

The Senator from Delaware happens to think that is a good idea, only there are several problems. I asked Dr. Bennett what the cost of this would be to the States, because I think we are required to have a little bit of truth in advertising here. I want to make it clear I do not believe there is any intention on the part of anyone—I should not have used that phrase, probably, it sounds like I am being too smart about it—but there is no intention to mislead anybody. Except when I asked how much it would cost the States, the answer was: Well, they did not know.

I asked: What type of drug test would be required? And the answer was they had not decided.

Possibly that answer will be forthcoming from the Senator from Kansas who is introducing this. But, for example, before my Judiciary Committee this morning, I had the Deputy Secretary of Defense, Secretary Atwood. He is in charge of the military's antidrug efforts, including the portion where the military has a very sound testing program in place.

The impact of their random drug testing program is to reduce significantly the drug use in the military, a very positive step, one that I support, and I suggest most of us would.

When I asked him how much did the drug test cost per test to be able to bring about this result, his answer was he would get the figure for me. But he knew it was somewhere around $25 or above; as much as $125 for steroid tests. I will correct the record if those numbers are incorrect. But the average is $25 if we were to pass this piece of legislation requiring this.

I should point out the President says this is a precondition for any State to receive any of the Federal funds for law enforcement and criminal justice system activities that are made available to them in this bill.

The distinguished Presiding Officer helped add another significant amount of money under the leadership, at that point if I am not mistaken, of Senator RUDMAN, insisting that we put more money in for law enforcement. I believe it was an additional $100 million. So we are talking about $450 million.

But in order to qualify to partake of any of that money, it is required that the States put this into effect, the drug testing.

Let us assume that we are talking about $25 per test.

Let us assume that we are only testing the arrestee once and on average, because some people are in jail for 10 years, some people are in for 40, some are in jail for 6 months, we end up testing the prison population only four times a year. And then we only test parolees and probationers only four times a year, which would be much less than the military would do, for example, in their random testing program.

It is easy to figure that out because we know the number of arrestees and detainees and parolees, et cetera, in the State system. We calculated it. For a Pentagon-type test, averaging $25, it would cost about $800 million to just have one urinalysis that costs $9. The cost would be $244 million based upon last year's criminal justice population, if you will, in the States.

Mr. RUDMAN. Will the Senator yield for one moment?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. RUDMAN. I just want to say I believe the Senator is absolutely correct on that number. That is the number we have also. But I point out, I think the problem of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is probably as much with the underlying language of the bill as it is with the Republican leader's amendment. The Republican leader's amendment simply says that the Attorney General shall take into account the ability to pay for drug-testing programs to be undertaken by the State and local governments. That is what the amendment does.

I will just make one observation, and I have an amendment here which I think the Senator from Delaware will like. If you look at the underlying bill, which is what we are debating right now, it says in section 523 of that bill, the first full paragraph, that the testing shall be subject to periodic review by the Attorney General as specified in the regulations described in subsection B for targeted classes of arrestees, et cetera.

Our expectation, Mr. President, is that the Attorney General, when he promulgates these regulations, will promulgate them with a scope that will at least be accommodated by the funding that we have available. I think that is probably what he would have to do. I just wanted the Senator to yield for that question or observation.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will remain on his feet, I would like to have a dialog about this, if we could. The first question I have is it would still be mandatory, notwithstanding the fact that the Attorney General could take into account the ability to pay? It would still be mandatory; would it not?

Mr. RUDMAN. It would be. I suspect as you read this language that the Attorney General could say in year 1 the States should have a program in which they would test 20 percent of all of those in each category. He can certainly do that. That is my only point. I do not think the Senator disagrees with me.

Mr. BIDEN. No, I do not, and that is a valid point.

Mr. RUDMAN. Maybe that is not very good. Maybe we ought to aim for 100 percent. I am simply saying within the accommodation of funds, he could do that.

Mr. BIDEN. Understanding, as the Senator does, we are not talking about Federal funds here.

Mr. RUDMAN. Exactly.

Mr. BIDEN. We are talking about State funds. We are doing once again what our Governors chastise us for doing. They say to us, "Look, ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, and the President, please, if you tell us we have to do something that we do not have any part of the decision in doing, if we want to participate in a Federal program, send us the wherewithal to do it."

They may be right; they may be wrong. The point here is that I think it would be much more prudent to wait until the Attorney General promulgates his rules to be able to determine what the circumstances are that are going to be required of the States, what actions are going to be required of the States; otherwise we are, to use that old phrase, passing a pig in a poke.

I have great respect for the Attorney General. I have no notion of going back to my State and telling them in order for them to participate in this drug program, which the Federal Government, in my view, has a responsibility of doing, in order to participate, I just voted for an amendment that will require them to do some kind of drug testing at some cost under some circumstance, none of which I could describe. And, by the way, I would have to say to my Republican Governor, "By the way, Governor Castle, the Federal Government does not require this of Federal prisoners." There is no Federal regulation. We are not even imposing it upon ourselves, unless I am missing something in the strategy or an amendment that may soon be offered.

Mr. RUDMAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I suspected that might be the case.

Mr. RUDMAN. One of the amendments I am going to offer has been suggested by the National Governors Association, which is a strong bipartisan group. They essentially want us to appropriate some National Institute of Justice funds in the amount of up to $400,000 for expressly the purpose the Senator from Delaware has just enunciated. I am almost tempted to ask unanimous consent to lay the pending amendment aside and offer this one. Of course, I expect it will be accepted.

Mr. BIDEN. I think we can work that out. I agree with that. I say to my friend from New Hampshire, and I am not being solicitous here, he always gets right down to the nub of things—and I mean this sincerely—and does it with an ability that few of us have on the floor. He has hit the core here. I believe that testing may be a good idea. I am inclined to support it. As a matter of fact, I proposed it in one of the amendments that I put forward to the Democratic caucus, for all prisoners, Federal as well. So I am not opposed to the notion. I think it is more prudent for us to appropriate such sums as may be necessary but, in the meantime, until we have determined how the program works and how much it costs, not make it mandatory for all States to put in place a drug-testing program.

Mr. RUDMAN. If the Senator will yield, I assume the Senator from Delaware is probably going to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator from Delaware is inclined to do that.

Mr. RUDMAN. And we will have a vote on that. The underlying bill itself has raised a lot of concerns on both sides of the aisle. There are two concerns, I say to my friend from Delaware. The first concern is precisely the one he raised: How do we know how much this is going to cost? The second concern is vesting too much control in the Attorney General of the United States in terms of having, if you will, oversight over the States. So I have two amendments, one to each of those legs, if you will, of the problem.

But it seems to me what the Senator from Delaware is speaking about does not address itself as much to the pending Dole amendment which simply says that the Attorney General ought to take into account the ability to pay for drug testing, but I think the Senator from Delaware has a problem, as others well may on both sides of the aisle, with the concept that we ought to start regulating the spending of money at the local level before we know how much money is to be spent. I think that summarizes our respective positions at this point.

Mr. BIDEN. I think that is correct, and I do not see how that is not, quite frankly, a glaring and absolutely killing deficiency in the Dole amendment.

Let me be more specific. My State of Delaware is in great shape economically. I think, and I am not being facetious, that the State of New Hampshire is in great shape. The only debate that has taken place in our State legislature with regard to the finances of the State in the last 8 years I believe has been the size of the tax cut, literally. And I believe there has been one every year; if not every year there has been one 70 percent of the time. That is always the debate.

The Attorney General, under the Dole amendment, could conclude that a particular State, which will remain nameless, that may have serious economic difficulty should not have to put a drug-testing program in effect. On the other hand, he may look at the State of Delaware, his neighboring State when he was Governor of Pennsylvania, and say, "But Delaware is in good shape," and he could mandate that Delaware spend money on a drug-testing program that it might rather spend on a drug treatment program; that it might rather spend money for education.

The central thesis that is being put forward is the one that the Senator from New Hampshire has acknowledged, and that is the Attorney General will determine what States will have to spend money on testing. He or she will make that judgment.

Second, another glaring deficiency as I see it is what constitutes testing. I am not attempting to be argumentative, but can the Senator from New Hampshire tell me how often the State will be required to test and what test it will have to have?

Mr. RUDMAN. Let me respond to my friend from Delaware this way. First, obviously, none of us know the answer because that is precisely what is anticipated in section 523. The Attorney General is supposed to set forth regulations, and I suppose the regulations would address frequency, type, and scope.

I cannot think of anything else you would cover in those regulations, I say to my friend from Delaware, other than frequency of testing, scope of testing, and type of testing.

Having said that, I point out that the regulations that we are talking about, which could be too broad or too narrow, depending on whose view you take, of course, are tied into drug grants in section 523. "No funding shall be provided under this part, whether by direct grant, cooperative agreement, or assistance in any form, to any State or to any political subdivision" unless they have implemented a plan under those regulations.

So I suppose, taking this analysis, it might interest my friend from Delaware to know in my State there have been instances with other Federal programs where the State and local governments looked at those programs and looked at those regulations and said we do not want to do them. That would not be a good result in this area because we certainly need all we can get, Federal and local, in this whole drug war.

I do not want to broaden this too much. I see that the real floor manager is here, the Senator from Utah. I was hoping to get a couple of these amendments, with which I think the Senator from Delaware would agree with, considered before I left the floor. I wonder, since we have had some floor discussion on this one——

Mr. BIDEN. To which one is the Senator referring?

Mr. RUDMAN. I am referring to the pending Dole amendment. I have two amendments which I believe are acceptable on that side.

Mr. BIDEN. To the Dole amendment.

Mr. RUDMAN. To the bill.

Mr. BIDEN. To the bill.

Mr. RUDMAN. I would like to get unanimous consent, if the Senator does not mind doing that—I have another conference to go to——

Mr. BIDEN. I am happy to accommodate the Senator. Is the Senator suggesting we lay aside the Dole amendment?

Mr. RUDMAN [continuing]. To consider my two amendments and then the Dole amendment become the pending business.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator from Delaware does not object. I do not know what the amendment is, but I do not object to putting the Dole amendment aside.

Mr. RUDMAN. Fine. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment offered in behalf of Senator DOLE be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). Is there objection?

Mr. RUDMAN. And that two amendments offered by the Senator from New Hampshire be in order; that upon disposition of those amendments the pending business be the Dole amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 913

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 913.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Proposed new section 523 is amended by inserting the following new subsection:

"(d) STATE IMPACT STUDY.—Of funds appropriated to the National Institute of Justice for fiscal year 1990, not to exceed $400,000 shall be made available to the National Criminal Justice Association to carry out a study of the fiscal and other impacts in States of implementing drug testing programs for targeted classes of arrestees, individuals in jails, prisons, and other correctional facilities, and persons on conditional or supervised release before or after conviction, including probationers, parolees, and persons released on bail. Six months following enactment of this section, the association shall report on its preliminary study findings. The final report on the study shall be completed one year after enactment of this section.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I think this is exactly the problem we have been discussing, and the State Governors are for this. I have not talked to them, but I would be amazed if the State attorneys general are not for this. I am certainly for this.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I am also for it, but let me make one thing clear. Either I am missing something or we are doing something that I am not sure the Senator from New Hampshire wants to do. That is, this is exactly what we should do before we make testing mandatory. That is, have the State impact study. It is totally appropriate. It is the logical way to go. But I would respectfully suggest to my friend from New Hampshire if it is adopted—and I have no objection to it—it will be the strongest argument against adopting the Dole amendment from the perspective of the Senator from Delaware because we should not make mandatory and thus give significant discretion to the Attorney General to discriminate among States—I mean that in the best sense of the word—a program that has not been delineated, the cost of which we have no notion and the nature of which we have not yet determined until this study proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire is finished.

So I would have no objection to accepting the State impact study amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I want to make clear that it does solve the problem of the Senator from Delaware if we are operating under the assumption that the rationale for the study is to determine the right way to do it, so why should we be doing something that we do not have any idea what the impact is until this is done.

I am for this amendment. I would be happy to accept it. But I want to make it clear that I do not accept it as in any way doing anything other than making an argument against the Dole amendment.

Mr. RUDMAN. If the Senator will yield.

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. RUDMAN. I think we are getting some syntax confused so let us make sure we are talking about the same thing. The Dole amendment is the amendment which simply said that the Attorney General ought to take into account State costs.

Mr. BIDEN. Correct.

Mr. RUDMAN. The Senator from Delaware referred to the Dole amendment. I think he is referring to the President's bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. RUDMAN. OK.

Mr. BIDEN. I am referring to both. I should be more precise. The underlying bill, the President's bill, that is S. 1711, a bill to implement the President's 1988 national drug control strategy, an amendment relating to justice assistance and drug testing.

Mr. RUDMAN. Let me then follow from that. If the Senator's remarks were just directed toward S. 1711, which is the underlying legislation that we are talking about, let me make this observation. If this amendment is accepted, and the bill stays as it is, then I am delighted that we have it because at least within 6 months we will have an impact for the Attorney General to look at. If the Senator from Delaware is successful in striking out the drug testing on the State part until after the study is done, then the Senator from Delaware is even more ahead. So I would make the observation that this is a no-lose situation.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator from Delaware agrees. So I urge we accept the amendment. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 913) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 914

(Purpose: To eliminate the provision subjecting State and local government drug testing plans to periodic review by the Attorney General)

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 914:

Proposed new section 523(a) is amended by striking, where it appears, "subject to periodic review by the Attorney General,".

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, let me see if I can explain this amendment, and I refer to S. 1711.

Mr. BIDEN. The President's bill.

Mr. RUDMAN. The President's bill, which we are now debating, the strategy. I am going to assume the bill is going to pass as written. If it does not, then it really does not make too much difference. But assuming the bill passes as written, I have a serious problem with the Attorney General of the United States having continuing oversight of how a State operates its drug testing program. I think that is up to the Governor of the State, it is up to the attorney general of the State, which the Presiding Officer was once in his prior life, as was the Senator from New Hampshire and a number of others in this Chamber. I do not believe we ought to give the Attorney General of the United States continuing oversight over how States administer these testing programs. If this amendment is adopted, Mr. President, and the Senator from Delaware is unsuccessful in changing the underlying legislation, the net result will be that we will have a bill which says to the Attorney General, "Set forth the scope, type, and frequency of testing. Once you do that, the States must generally comply with that, but once they do, they are on their own to continue it. You cannot come back to them every year and say, 'I do not like what you are doing.'"

That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN].

Mr. BIDEN. I am reluctant to accept it not because the Senator from New Hampshire is not correct in that if the strategy is accepted it makes it better. I am reluctant to accept it because I do not want to make better a bill that is a turkey to begin with, that we should not do what my distinguished friend from New Hampshire is doing—putting very colorful feathers on this turkey.

Mr. RUDMAN. I hope the Senator will certainly make every effort to approve this bill, irrespective of its original authorship.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator is always persuaded by the Senator from New Hampshire. I am prepared to accept the amendment, turkey or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 914) was agreed to.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 910

Mr. RUDMAN. Is the Senator from New Hampshire correct that the pending business is the Dole amendment to S. 1711?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I would like to ask my friend from Delaware this question before I leave the floor. The Republican leader is going to say to me, you did very well, your two amendments were adopted, but mine is still in limbo. I want to ask this question. Would the Senator from Delaware explain to me what the problem is with this Dole amendment which essentially really does what the Senator from Delaware wants to do, it seems to me, as well as working, I think, hand in glove with the amendment we accepted on the National Governors' Association.

What this amendment says is the Attorney General had better pay heed the ability to pay by local and city and State governments. That is the only amendment that Senator DOLE has pending before the body.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I have great respect for the minority leader. The reason I will not accept this amendment—and at some point we will end up having a rollcall vote—is that just by accepting it I would be acknowledging the fact that the Attorney General should have the authority under any circumstances to make judgments about whether a State could or could not pay.

Just by my accepting the second amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, a moment ago, we eliminated some of the discretion that the President's bill gives the Attorney General because we both just said we do not want the Attorney General to have that kind of discretion. Once the regulation is set he should be out of the picture.

I, as a matter of principle, consistent with my accepting the last amendment, do not want the Attorney General to have authority over a program and discretion over a program that is yet to be defined and even if it were defined, I do not want the Attorney General of the United States, Democratic or Republican, being able to say if it is a national policy that the State of Pennsylvania does not have to, in order to qualify to get its portion of $450 million of a Federal fund, participate in this program, whereas the State of Delaware has to in order to qualify. It seems to me it gives a great deal of power, political as well as substantive power, to the Attorney General under a circumstance where the Attorney General should not possess that power. That is my reasoning as succinctly as I can state it for my friend from New Hampshire.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Delaware for this explanation. I understand it. I expect there will be further discussion about this.

I see that the Senator from Utah has now arrived on the floor. He truly is the manager being a member, of the Judiciary Committee, a committee I am not privileged to serve on. I will yield the manager's chair to the Senator from Utah, and thank the Senator from Delaware for his courtesy.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee would be better served had it the Senator from New Hampshire on it, and I mean that sincerely.

Mr. President, if we could put this back in focus for a moment, to make sure that everyone understands the objection of the Senator from Delaware to this portion of the President's drug strategy, it says that in order for—I am paraphrasing—States to be able to participate in any of the funds made available by the Federal Government for the war on drugs it must first put into effect—now I shall read. Let me read the whole section.

Section 532(a), Program Required. No funding shall be provided under this part whether by direct grant, cooperative agreement, or assistance in any form—

I might note parenthetically that is yet to be defined, what assistance in any form means—to any State or any political subdivision or instrumentality of the State that has not formulated and implemented a drug testing program subject to periodic review—

We have stricken that phrase, "subject to periodic review."

a drug testing program as specified in regulations described in section B for targeted classes of arrestees, individuals in jail,

Et cetera.

What this says is that the States, in order to get any funds at all to fight the war on drugs, will have to spend a minimum of a quarter of a billion dollars to as much as a billion on a drug testing program in order to get into the pot of $450 million.

So that may be fine. Maybe we should do that. But the problem here is we are buying a pig in the poke. The regulations read now section 523(b):

The attorney general shall not later than 6 months after the enactment of this section promulgate regulations.

So we are asking the Senate to go on record to tell the citizens of their State while we are saying by the way "read my lips, no new taxes." We are saying "read my lips, no new taxes." That is the Federal policy so far, no new taxes in this drug bill. We are saying to the States that 6 months from now the Attorney General, not under the supervision of the United States Congress, not being required to come back and get the Congress to sign off on it, can come up with as little or as much as he wants. He can demand a testing program that costs $135 per test. He can demand a testing program that costs $9 a test. He can set out regulations requiring arrestees be tested once and every prisoner in prison every 4 months be tested, every parolee, every 2 months tested, every probationer of 1 month tested.

What is the purpose of the testing program? The purpose of the testing program is to see to it that people under the control of the criminal justice system are drug free. In all the testimony before my committee they tell me, and before the Labor Committee, I say to the Presiding Officer, I suggest, says you are going to have to test people once a week to know that; sometimes more frequently.

So if the purpose is to make sure they are drug free, then are we talking about once a week testing? If that is not the purpose, what is the reason to test once a month, once a year? What are we talking about? What is this all about?

But the irony is I cannot think of any other program that could cost anywhere from a quarter of a billion dollars to a billion dollars to the States that we would pass on this floor and say but, by the way, we have no idea what it is going to look like, none. Trust me, I am from the Federal Government, trust me. Six months from now I will tell you. And oh, by the way, there is a caveat, we do not test our own prisoners, we do not test our own parolees, we do not test our own probationers. What is good for you is not good for us. The States have almost a million people in their prisons, not counting those that they arrest and how many people are on probation and parole. The Federal Government only has 50,000 people in their prisons. We are so certain—well, I have made my point. I love the Attorney General, and I think he is a fine man, and the next person may be a fine man or woman, but I, for one, am not prepared to give the Attorney General a blank check to come back to us 6 months—not even come back to us; he does not have to come back to us—from now and say, Governors of the State, you have to spend X amount of dollars to sign in. Maybe the States should do it. I want to know what the price tag is, and at the appropriate time, I will move against the amendment, but not at this moment.

I might add one other thing. I am prepared to accept the Dole and the Burns amendments, and there is a Burns amendment we are going to hear from in a moment. I have an amendment that would wipe out making it mandatory. If we can agree that it will not be mandatory on the States, then I am prepared, if we strike the word mandatory, to accept the Dole and the Burns amendments.

I see my distinguished colleague from Utah is on his feet. I yield the floor to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I thank my distinguished friend from Delaware for yielding the floor to me.

This is an important bill. We are going to have a lot of amendments on the bill—so it appears to me. We have already had a few, and some have been accepted. It looks as though the distinguished Senator from Delaware may be willing to accept some other amendments. We are debating S. 1711, introduced by Senator DOLE, which is the remaining legislative provision not yet considered from President Bush's drug control strategy.

S. 1711 requires drug testing in the judicial system, to end drug use, not only in our prisons, but also for those who are arrested and released on bond, who are on probation or who are paroled. I support this provision, and I included post-incarcerated drug testing provisions in my crime proposal, S. 1228, entitled the Crime Reduction Act.

The President's drug control strategy requires both State and Federal drug enforcement efforts to hold offenders accountable for their drug use, and then through supervision and drug testing, help these offenders to stay off drugs. We in Congress, with the support of the American people, are willing to spend more on law enforcement activities to rid the streets of the drug pusher. But we must make sure that our law enforcement system is held accountable. Arrestees in our law enforcement system should be completely free from drugs as a condition for release on bond, probation, or parole. Now, that is tough, but that certainly is going to have a very good effect in the fight against illegal drugs.

Last week, we passed, as amendments to the Transportation appropriations bill, four other provisions of the President's drug control strategy. One provision requires States to ensure that their treatment programs are effective by requiring performance-based State plans. Another provision requires that educational systems demonstrate that they are drug-free as a condition of receipt of Federal funds. The remaining provisions allow for assistance to countries which have defaulted on loans, for training of antidrug police for the military in the Andean countries, for the transfer of up to $150 million in excess funds from asset forfeiture funds, and for those to be transferred to the special forfeiture fund controlled by the director of drug control.

In record fashion, we will have debated, discussed and approved President Bush's drug control strategy and added 11 percent in additional funds. I applaud my colleagues for working on this in such an expeditious fashion. There have been a whole raft of colleagues who have been participating on both sides of the aisle, and it has taken a lot of good will, good exchange and a lot of good effort to be able to arrive at this point. I want to especially commend President Bush for his efforts in developing this strategy, along with Bill Bennett, of course, the person who had direct responsibility.

However, Mr. President, I really feel that I have to add one word of caution. A strategy to reduce drug abuse in America is incomplete, unless we tackle the harder questions and issues like the death penalty, the reform of the exclusionary rule and the reform of habeas corpus proceedings. Addressing these issues in a constructive manner will be a significant step toward battling drug abuse in America.

I look forward to the debate on these provisions at a later time in this session of Congress. We have to do that. If those who claim that they are fighting against drug abuse in our society are unwilling to get tough on crime, unwilling to have the death penalty, unwilling to reform the exclusionary rule—which has allowed so many of these people to get off on technicalities—and, if they are unwilling to reform our habeas corpus proceedings and stop the never-ending appeals through the process at never-ending costs to the taxpayers and at never-ending congestion to our courts, then do not tell me they are for really a longlasting solution or even a short-term solution of trying to resolve the drug abuse problems in America.

We have to address these issues in a constructive manner. I think we will do that later on in this Congress. Although, I have to admit that we will probably pass a number of things that will never see the light of day because either our friends in the other body will not allow it to happen or, somehow or other, through procedural moves over here we may be reduced to not doing that all too important part of the total drug strategy the President has.

Mr. President, the reason we are all working toward legislation to reduce drug abuse in America is because the drug epidemic has brought this Nation numerous stories of children selling drugs in our neighborhoods; newborn babies addicted to drugs because of their mother's use of illegal drugs; 200,000 young babies every year born that are addicted to drugs and drug use because of their mothers; increased numbers of youth gangs in many communities around America where law-abiding Americans are being robbed by persons who need to finance their drug habits, and more and more Americans who are being gunned down by drug dealers. We see that right here in this town, the capital of the United States. Probably the most important single city in the world. There are certain areas of this city where I would not walk down the street, and I do not think anybody else who really did not have to would either.

As we debate here today, there are kids getting high on crack, pre-teens using alcohol, and drug deals going on within the very view of the Capitol dome. There are many law-abiding community-spirited people who can help rid their communities—this community, too—and this Nation from the scourge of drugs.

Where did it all start? Several weeks ago Senator MOYNIHAN sent me an article out of the Atlanta Journal dated December 31, 1985, which reported on the epidemic of smoking highly addictive cocaine rocks beginning in 1983. Since 1983, we have seen this practice sweep our Nation—sweep the Nation in less than 6 years—to a point where it is killing a whole generation of children and young adults. This killing is going on directly as a result of drug use and of gang wars between pushers protecting their turf. Drug abuse has added immensely to our murder rates and decreased the safety in our streets.

It has increased the number of addicted infants. I mentioned 200,000 a year are born addicted and in many cases severely handicapped. It is adding a costly burden for future years and, at the same time, robbing this Nation of its greatest resource, its youth. And, it is destroying our ability to compete by impairing our workforce.

We have taken steps in the past to do something about drug abuse, but at no time have we faced a drug that is as cheap and available as crack cocaine or is as apparently addictive. Mr. President, we are all concerned about this epidemic of crack cocaine; but, we cannot ignore the other drug use going on in this Nation. We cannot ignore the use of heroin and PCP. Nor, the abuse of prescription drugs. We must end the use of "ice" or crystallized methamphetamine, and, stop the use of "tolley" in Chicago. Tolley is Toluene, a benzene derivative used legitimately to thin oil-based paints, clean carburetors, and make glue. Unfortunately, some have been using it to get high. Today, we must do whatever we can to stop this societal suicide.

We are all pleased to hear from the National Institute on Drug Abuse that the rate of substance use by high school seniors appears to be going down. However, I was told just yesterday that there are about 13,000 teens with substance abuse problems in my home State of Utah. We have less than 250 beds to treat them. Therefore, we need to expand our treatment programs, and we need to help those who need treatment to get it. President Bush has put forth a workable plan to help Utah and other States reach their goals of reducing the demand for drugs and controlling its distribution.

I look forward to working with my colleagues today. I particularly look forward to working with my distinguished colleague from Delaware. I do not know of anyone in the Senate who has tried to spend more time on this issue or is more concerned—having worked in the criminal law field in the past before coming here as a young lawyer. I know he has a working knowledge of some of the problems that are involved here. I have enjoyed working with him and enjoyed his leadership as chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

I hope we will not make this as partisan as we have in the past. I hope we can work together. I hope we will understand that this President has been carrying a very difficult ball in this very, very difficult war. It is not a game. I think no one understands that better than this good chairman of our Judiciary Committee, my friend from Delaware.

So I look forward to working with him for reform and working to make it worthwhile, to make it better than it has been. I look forward to cooperating with the President because without his leadership we are not going to make any headway. We can mouth off all we want to in the Congress of the United States, but without the leader of the free world to lead the fight here, we are not going to have much success or make much headway. I think we should be sensitive to the needs of the President and we should be sensitive to the ideas of the President.

No one has all the ideas, and I know George Bush would be last to say he is the only one who has the right ideas. He would be the first to say "If you can improve it, fellows, do so." He would be the first to say "I want to support everything that is worthwhile in this fight against, war against, drugs."

It is my hope that we will help every State, community, school, church, club, business, police department and, yes, family to deal out the drug dealers with strict law enforcement, eliminate the demand for drugs through education and prevention and help those who have fallen into this trap through effective treatment programs.

We have started. We made a big step last week. I hope we can make a big step this week, and I hope we can continue to work together in a bipartisan way in the best interest of our country. I am sure if it is up to the distinguished Senator from Delaware and myself, we will be able to do so.

We may have disagreements on some amendments brought here, but I will certainly look at every amendment and look at the ideas of every Senator who comes over here and brings amendments. We do our best to try to help our country have the best legislation come out of this floor for consideration at this time.

It is my understanding that the distinguished Senator from Montana is waiting to offer an amendment, and I will yield the floor so he can do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS], is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Dole amendment be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 915

(Purpose: To allow the Attorney General to take into account the regular legislative sessions of each State)

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS], proposes an amendment numbered 915.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, after line 10, insert the following:

"(d) In issuing regulations pursuant to subsection (b) of this Act, the Attorney General shall also take into account any limitations on the ability of a State to meet the requirements of this Act due to the schedule of its regular legislative sessions regulations.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the colloquy that has been going on now between the two managers of the bill. I might add that all the points that have been made about drugs and the problem we have in this country are very valid.

It also seems to me that when we come down to an issue such as this, money may not be the answer. I think that this problem might be solved if the leadership in this country could convince our citizens how bad this problem really is, and that it will take everybody's involvement to deal with the drug problem. It is everyone's responsibility, all the way from the ordinary citizen, to community leaders, right through to Congress.

I consider drugs to be our No. 1 national security problem. I have a daughter who is starting her first year at Montana State University, and I asked her the other day about this problem in school. She advised me that she thinks drug use is declining. National studies show that once kids go to saying that drugs "ain't" cool, then that means it is on the decline.

I have heard people say that the program "Just Say No" was a ridiculous thing when it was brought out by President and Mrs. Reagan. But the program is catching on because a first grader came home the other day and I was talking to him across the fence. I said, "Do you like your teacher?" He said, "Yep, I really like my teacher." I said, "what is the first thing you learned?" He said, "Just say no, and if somebody asks you, tell the teacher about it." So it is catching on. It is a little phrase that will catch on. We should all use it.

And we have to go further. There is no doubt about that.

I just would like to really urge every citizen in this Nation that it is going to take involvement by you, by people, a body, a mind, and to give some support to the kids that do have the nerve to say no.

Now, let me express my support of the final element of the President's strategy on this war on drugs. A lot of work went into it. This Government and this administration have already proven that they have a commitment to the war on drugs.

I do have some reservations, which were expressed by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and also the Senator from Delaware, that the way we go about it may be questionable.

Drug testing of certain arrestees, inmates, and parolees will help detect and deal with continued drug use by known drug offenders. This legislation will also act as a deterrent to keep drug offenders drug free.

What my amendment does is direct the Attorney General to take into account the standing meeting times of each State legislature.

In Montana, the legislature only meets for 90 days every 2 years. In addition there are procedural time requirements in adopting regulations to implement their testing program.

What we are trying to do, and the Senator from Delaware summed it up, is to put a different feather on this legislation; we are trying to make it better so it is acceptable to this body.

I have been told by the Montana Board of Crime Control that they will need time to propose legislation for consideration by the legislature, which does not meet until the first 3 months of 1991.

Once the drug testing legislation is considered and adopted by the State legislature, additional time may be needed to implement the regulations. I would hate to see Montana lose the much needed funding to combat drugs because of a regulatory glitch.

So I offer this amendment and I ask for its consideration. I believe my amendment is acceptable to both sides. I thank them for their consideration.

I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. I apologize to the Chair. I think we are getting very close to working something out. I hope we are. There are a number of other amendments to move.

As a matter of accommodation—I do not mean merely personal accommodation because of my affection for the Senator from Montana but because his amendment makes sense—this side is prepared to accept his amendment. But I should point out, so I am not misleading anyone, it may be as we work out a total compromise for this, his amendment may not be necessary.

His amendment is necessary to protect the States of Montana and Delaware and other States and he is doing a great service to the States by proposing it, but hopefully we will be able to work something out that will not require this protection. But in the event the Senator from Delaware is incapable of doing that, I am prepared to accept the amendment because it would improve the situation as it exists now.

I urge adoption of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. HATCH. We are also prepared to accept the amendment. I think it is a good amendment. I agree with the distinguished Senator, it may not be necessary in the end, but it is certainly good in this process at this particular point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment (No. 915) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I congratulate my colleague from Montana. Let me say to those who may be listening in their committees and offices, attempting to determine what we are on, I understand we are back on the Dole amendment at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. We have returned, under the previous order, to the Dole amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. I would like to suggest to the Republican manager of this debate, we, maybe, should alert our colleagues who have amendments. I know Senator KENNEDY indicated he had an amendment. I see the Senator from Colorado, Senator WIRTH, is here and he has an amendment. I will not ask unanimous consent to lay aside the Dole amendment unless my Republican friend indicates that we should continue to work on a potential compromise.

If we do, we should, then, lay the Dole amendment aside and move on to another amendment. Does that make sense to the Senator?

Mr. HATCH. I think it does. We are close to having an effective compromise with the administration plus, I hope, with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. If we can do that, then we can go to whatever other amendments we have. I know the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and I have a number of other amendments we have agreed to with regard to the Labor and Human Resources Committee, which has extensive jurisdiction in this area. We can move to amendments like that and proceed in an orderly fashion to resolve the conflicts on this bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I will be glad to.

Mr. BIDEN. I suggest, maybe to accommodate our colleagues and in no way interfere with the progress we are making on the underlying amendment, that we consider laying aside the Dole amendment and go to the Wirth amendment so we can move and continue to make progress.

If that is agreeable with my colleague from Utah, I ask unanimous consent that we set aside temporarily the Dole amendment, move to the Wirth amendment, and, upon completion of the Wirth amendment, the pending business be the Dole amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand the distinguished Senator from Colorado has an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a unanimous-consent request that was not acted upon.

Mr. BIDEN. I move it be acted upon, if we could. Does the Chair want me to repeat it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request was to set aside the pending Dole amendment and go to the amendment of Senator WIRTH and return to the Dole amendment. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 916, AS MODIFIED

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. We have a unanimous-consent request for a change in the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] proposes an amendment numbered 916.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

At the appropriate section, insert the following:

That the Office of the National Drug Control Policy is directed to develop a coordinated policy in conjunction with State and local governments to counteract youth gang involvement in the distribution, sale and use of illegal drugs;

That the coordinated policy to be developed, as referenced above, include, though not be limited to, programs or means to prevent young people from joining a gang and methods to reform, rehabilitate, educate or train gang members and turn them away from illegal gang activities.

That this policy be implemented as soon as practical but no later than February 1, 1991.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the effective date of the implementation of the policy be changed to read no later than February 1, 1991. I understand that was the request made by the distinguished Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. No objection. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, we are all familiar with the upsurge of activity, particularly in Los Angeles with the Crips and the Bloods and in New York with two Jamaican gangs. Less well known is the rapid spread of this gang activity east from Los Angeles and south from New York City and probably elsewhere as well.

In Colorado, for example, we have seen a very rapid, and absolutely frightening spread of gang activity. The numbers of young people involved in the gangs in Colorado have, by our most recent accounts, gone from 200 to 2,000 in the last 3 years. The age of the kids getting involved in this has gotten younger and younger and younger. People are shot in the streets for wearing the wrong color. We also know that drugs play a critical role in the lives of gang members.

The thrust of the amendment that I have offered is to require the Office of National Drug Control Policy to develop a coordinated policy in conjunction with State and local governments to counteract youth gang involvement.

We must use what we have learned from our bitter experience, in Los Angeles, New York and now in Denver as these gangs spread all across the country. We must share the lessons learned so more of the United States can benefit from this experience and have a constructive base to interdict and stop the spread of gang activity.

I have met with police officials and community activists in the Denver metropolitan area. It is very clear that they know a great deal about what happens and they have a lot of good advice and experience to transmit to other communities about what to do. We should provide a vehicle to spread that information. What we do not want to do is leave a whole variety of communities bereft of that experience.

In addition, we want to learn a great deal more about why kids join and how we go about preventing them from joining gangs. Some people are out there providing not only good models to these kids, but to other members of the community as well about how to live life without the gangs. For example, Rev. Leon Kelly, who opened the Senate in prayer not long ago, has been very effective in Denver providing alternatives and direction to kids so they do not feel compelled to join the gangs and become involved in illegal activity. His independent project—the Open Door to Youth Gang Alternatives—works with any and all kids in the neighborhood to point and guide them to a new direction. His skills, talents, and techniques can be helpful to other communities, and that should be part of the role of the coordinated policy.

I believe both sides are going to accept this amendment. I think it makes a great deal of sense to so many of our communities. I hope my colleagues will see fit to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado? The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we are prepared to accept this amendment. I think it is a good amendment, and it is something that all of us, especially in the Western States, are highly concerned about. Gangs have arisen in most States. I commend the distinguished Senator from Colorado for having offered the amendment. We are prepared to accept it if the distinguished Senator from Delaware will also.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I also think it is a very worthwhile amendment. We are prepared to accept it. I congratulate the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the leadership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 916), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We now return to the Dole amendment. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I have several amendments. I ask my colleague from Utah whether or not it would not be appropriate to once again lay aside the Dole amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Could we see your amendments first?

Mr. BIDEN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WIRTH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 917

(Purpose: To authorize funding for Federal law enforcement agencies and courts)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Dole amendment be temporarily set aside, which I believe is the business before the Senate at the moment, for the consideration of a Biden amendment which I send to the desk, and at the completion of the Biden amendment, that we return to the Dole amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] proposes an amendment numbered 917.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

Subtitle G—Federal Law Enforcement Agencies

SEC. 81. ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, the following sums (which shall be in addition to any other appropriations):

(1) For the Federal Bureau of Investigation: $57,000,000 for the hiring of additional agents and support personnel to be dedicated to the investigation of drug trafficking organizations;

(2) For the Drug Enforcement Administration: $47,500,000 which shall include—

(A) not to exceed $10,000,000 for enforcing provisions of Federal law regarding precursor and essential chemicals; and

(B) not to exceed $37,500,000 for assigning not fewer than 250 agents to rural areas where State and local law enforcement agencies have identified the distribution of "crack" cocaine and/or the manufacture and distribution of methamphetamine to be a serious law enforcement problem that exceeds the resources of local law enforcement, and involves trafficking across State or national boundaries;

(3) For the United States Courts; $9,000,000 for additional probation officers, judges, magistrates and other personnel including not to exceed $2,000,000 for training, document production, and other expenses related to the implementation of the Federal sentencing guidelines;

(4) For the United States Attorneys: $24,000,000 for additional prosecutors and staff to implement a program of prosecuting in Federal court drug offenses arising out of arrests and investigations conducted by State and local law enforcement agencies;

(5) For Defender Services: $8,000,000 for the defense of persons prosecuted in Federal court for drug offenses arising out of arrests and investigations conducted by State and local law enforcement agencies; and

(6) For the United States Marshals: $9,000,000.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will be as brief and straightforward as I possibly can on this. This is basically a law enforcement amendment. The drug director in testifying before the Judiciary Committee, as well as other committees, indicated that notwithstanding the fact we must do a good deal on education and prevention, interdiction and eradication, that the central thrust of the President's strategy was to see to it that we rebuild the criminal justice system. He pointed out that the system was in disarray.

As a consequence of that, last week one of the major elements of reconstructing that system was put in place. We appropriated over $1.4 billion for prison construction as well as other law enforcement portions and provisions. But what we did not do is deal with beefing up the Federal criminal justice system.

My amendment would call for the addition of 1,000 FBI agents, 350 new drug agents, 300 new U.S. attorneys, and $26 million for the courts, marshals, and public defenders. The reason for this is that it has been made abundantly clear by testimony before the committee that in order to be able to make the system work, we must not only have prisons that are available upon conviction, and while detaining someone for trial who has not made bail, but we must have a sufficient number of judges, prosecutors, and agents in the streets to be able to meet the goals set forth by the President and goals that we, quite frankly, the Senate, augmented when we passed the appropriations bill last week.

Let me give you one specific item. I am prepared to discuss and debate this at some length. I am not attempting to cut off any interchange. I am going to focus on one piece to illustrate why this money is so badly needed.

Today we had a hearing in the Judiciary Committee in which we had the Director of the FBI, Mr. Sessions, and the head of the DEA, Mr. John Lawn, as well as the Assistant Secretary of Defense, Mr. Atwood. When discussing with the FBI Director, Mr. Sessions, what the intention of the FBI was, what its mandate on the drug issue, he said its fundamental basic mandate was to go after drug organizations and decapitate them, eliminate their leadership by convicting them, putting them in prison and essentially dissassembling the organization. He said that is the most important function the FBI has as it relates to the war on drugs.

Then we asked him. We said: "Mr. Director, how many of these drug organizations are there in the United States?" He said "We have identified specifically 450 such organizations."

I said "Based upon the amount of personnel that you have now, how many of those organizations are you able to target? You have identified them as drug organizations. How many are you able to target, which is your specific charge, and what is the primary responsibility you have under the drug effort?"

He said "Senator, we are able to target roughly 225 of the 450 organizations." Or said another way, half of the drug organizations identified are not able to be targeted, not able to be matched against in a coordinated effort.

Then I said "Well, of the 225 that you have targeted, how much personnel have you had to borrow from other duties within the FBI to put them on this drug duty?"

He said "Senator, we have had to take and reposition 300 FBI agents."

This is after the additional agents that the President's drug strategy provides for the FBI.

I said "Well, where do they come from? Where are these 300 agents? They are not just manufactured out of air."

He said "Senator, we have taken them primarily from our organized crime units, and from our white-collar crime units."

It was not but 3 years ago on this floor the U.S. Senate, the U.S. House of Representatives, and the President rose up in unison and said we are not doing enough about white-collar crime in America. Computer fraud is rampant.

We held hearings, and pointed out that tens of billions of dollars were being stolen. The cost to business was incredible. We said we must do more on white-collar crime.

Here you have the Director of the FBI forthrightly stating today as he has on other occasions that even to do what the present strategy calls for, even with the additional personnel provided in the drug strategy, he is still 300 FBI agents short.

I said "Well, how will you deal with that?"

He said "In the short term, we can."

I said "How about long term? What happens, Mr. Director, on the long term?"

He said "Well, our efforts against traditional organized crime units and white-collar crime will suffer."

So I said "Mr. Director, how many people would you need to be able to do what you are charged to do at this point, not just in the drug area, but the broader responsibilities of the FBI, and target all 450 of these identified drug organizations?"

He said "One thousand people."

I said "Now, let me ask you: Do you have any doubt if you had those people you would be able to successfully move against those agencies, those drug organizations?"

He said "No." He had no doubt.

Director Sessions is a plain-spoken, straightforward man. These 1,000 agents or the $57 million to which I referred in this broader amendment is what he asks for in the drug strategy. When Director Bennett was going to all the appropriate agencies and saying "What do you need to do your part of the job?" He came back and said "I need 1,000 people, 1,000 new people."

Mr. President, the case is absolutely clear. With the additional drug money provided, with the President's strategy, and with the goals that are set, the Director of the FBI is already 300 people short. He is robbing Peter to pay Paul. And even at that, he is only able to target one-half of the identified drug organizations in America, and everyone has acknowledged that the place where genuine progress is made on the law enforcement side is going after these organizations. I might add, and I hope this does not sound chauvanistic, the FBI is a first-rate organization. They do their jobs well, and where they have targeted, they have had significant success, which leads one to believe the assertion that if they had the additional manpower, they could do a good deal more. This is a major effort.

We are, in my view, short changing one of the two most important organs in our war against drug criminals for $57 million, out of a budget that is well in excess of $8 billion.

I will not take the time of the Senate at this moment, unless someone wishes to further discuss it, except to say that the same can be said for the DEA and the same for U.S. attorneys.

Mr. SIMON. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. SIMON. Let me commend the Senator, first, for his leadership in this whole area, not just recently, but it has been strong and consistent and firm and solid, and we are grateful to him. My understanding is that it contains three things that I have introduced bills on, two of which I think he has also been involved in, and one is in the area of bail reform. Once you are convicted, you cannot post bond if you are involved in drug trafficking; you cannot post bond and just walk the streets, except for very few exceptions that are stipulated; is that correct?

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator is absolutely correct, but if I can say to the Senator, this particular amendment that I have proposed does not encompass that. The Senator from Delaware is prepared, on the completion of this amendment, to accept—and because the Senator from Illinois has been a leader on this point; he went back to his home State, as he told us all, and came back and said, "Look, this is a critical element of the war." I want to make it clear that what we are talking about here, what the amendment of the Senator from Delaware does is add FBI agents, DEA agents, U.S. attorneys and U.S. marshals. It does not deal with the issue the Senator has raised.

Mr. SIMON. OK. I have two others. One is to increase penalties, and one that I know the Senator has also been working on, drug testing in prison and post-release; and we will have another opportunity to insert those amendments here.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator is correct, I believe, and it is my expectation, that we can clear two of those. We may very well be able to fold the last one into a compromise that we are attempting to work out on the whole drug-testing program. I urge the Senator, if he has a moment after this amendment, not to leave the floor, because he has played a critical part in the drug-testing debate for Federal prisoners, so we can see if he would be willing to sign on or augment the amendment that is being discussed, that we are trying to compromise.

Mr. SIMON. I will be pleased to, and I look forward to working with the Senator and my colleague from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Delaware, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has offered an amendment here that I think the President would be very happy to support.

This is an authorization bill. As I understand the amendment, he would add 350 drug enforcement personnel at a cost of $47.5 million. He would add 1,000 FBI agents at a cost of $57 million and 300 new U.S. attorneys at a cost of $24 million, along with other court officers and personnel.

Mr. BIDEN. Twenty-six million.

Mr. HATCH. For $26 million more. I believe that the President of the United States certainly is in sympathy with what the distinguished Senator desires to do, and I certainly am sympathetic. There is no use kidding, if we are going to fight this war, we have to have the leader to fight it with. We have sat through hours of testimony on the Judiciary Committee and elsewhere, where leaders in these respective law enforcement communities have indicated they need extra help. I think it is a good amendment. The real question is, since this is an authorization bill, can we find the moneys to be able to do this? I hope that we can, because I think it is essential in this battle.

I think what the distinguished Senator is doing is worthwhile, forward-looking in its approach, and I believe that the administration ought to do everything it can to see if we can find the moneys that would implement these changes, as he sees them, as I see them, and as, of course, others see them. I would like to be listed as a principal cosponsor along with him on this particular amendment. I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it has been a long time since the Senator from Delaware has been in court and practiced law, but I remember the one thing I was taught initially. When you are winning, sit down. I am grateful for the acceptance of the amendment. I am delighted to have as a principal cosponsor of the amendment the Senator from Utah. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment (No. 917) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that upon the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on amendment 910, by unanimous consent earlier. We are back on the basic Dole amendment.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator from Pennsylvania is seeking recognition. We may be able to set aside the Dole amendment to move on. At the moment I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 918

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a second-degree amendment to the Dole amendment now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND], for himself and Mr. HATCH, proposes an amendment numbered 918.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, strike lines 1 through 10 on page 3 and insert the following:

"DRUG TESTING DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

"SEC. 523. (a) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The Attorney General shall establish a federal drug testing demonstration program under this section, which shall be based in part on scientific and technical standards determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to ensure reliability and accuracy of drug test results. In addition to specifying acceptable methods and procedures for carrying out drug testing, the program may include guidelines or specifications concerning—

"(1) the classes of persons to be targeted for testing;

"(2) the drugs to be tested for;

"(3) the frequency and duration of testing; and

"(4) the effect of test results in decisions concerning the sentence, the conditions to be imposed on release before or after conviction, and the granting, continuation, or termination of such release.

"(b) There is authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000.00 in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 to carry out the section.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, this is a substitute which came from the discussions and the very thoughtful comments made by the managers of the bill. Basically, it directs the Attorney General to establish a pilot program of testing in the Federal prison systems. It would authorize $5 million to institute it. It also provides that the standards for testing would be those which would be approved by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. It would give us, in short, an opportunity to see how tests work in the prison system.

There are a number of us who had some problems with some of the technicalities of the original provision in this amendment, which states that all funds would be withheld from the State unless and until they had adopted a testing program which was acceptable to the Attorney General.

The problem is that we do not yet know what kind of testing program would work. We felt it was perhaps an unwarranted extension of the power of the Attorney General to give him the power to cut off funds from a State if they did not happen to adopt a program which was acceptable to the Attorney General.

Therefore, with this amendment, combined with the Rudman amendment, which was previously accepted, which would establish the 6-month study, we would be undertaking at the Federal Government level the kind of pilot project which would give us the information on how this program would work and how it would be implemented at the Federal level.

Once we have the example of the Federal program, we see how that works and we have the opportunity to get the benefit of the study provided for in the Rudman amendment, then I believe that we would be in the best position to determine what further steps should be taken with respect to drug testing in the prisons and among those who are arrested.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I compliment the former Governor of Missouri and a Senator from Missouri for two reasons.

One, quite frankly, I was not sure the Senator from Delaware was making all that much progress making his case until the Senator from Missouri came to the floor and as a former Governor he apparently knows, or he knows better than any of us, what it is to be mandated to do things the outcome of which no one knows and the cost of which no one has calculated. So I compliment him for getting involved in this and bringing it to resolution.

So the record is clear, what will be left of the President's drug strategy, of the President's bill, S. 1711, is that no longer will there be a mandate to the States to undertake testing and no longer will there be a condition precedent in order for the States to participate in Federal funding efforts on the drug and law enforcement side. What will be left is what the former Attorney General and former Governor, the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Missouri, put together here, and that is that there will be an authorization of $400,000 to a Federal agency to study the utility and cost and wherewithal of implementing a nationwide, statewide drug testing program and, further, there will be authorized $5 million made available to the Attorney General to set up a pilot program for such testing within the Federal prison and the Federal criminal justice system.

That is all that will be left of the testing portion of the strategy. It does not mean we may not come back in 6 months, a year, 2 years from now and do what the President and Mr. Bennett have originally suggested. That is still open to us, but we are not doing that now. We are authorizing up to $400,000 for a study and up to $5 million for an implementation of a pilot program. I think that is a wise and sound resolution of this dilemma.

I compliment all those who worked on this compromise. I am prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I thank the manager for his kind words. It was his pointing out of the problems that called our attention to the fact that some changes were needed in this.

It has been pointed out to me that this amendment should properly be an amendment to the bill and not an amendment to the Dole amendment. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as an amendment to the bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there any further debate and the amendment? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment (No. 918) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOND. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

AMENDMENT NO. 919

(Purpose: To amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to provide for substance abuse treatment services on request for individuals desiring to rid themselves of substance abuse problems, and for other purposes)

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself; Mr. DOLE, the Republican leader; the distinguished chairman, Mr. BIDEN; Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. DODD and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for 1 minute?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we once again set aside the Dole amendment, which is the pending amendment for consideration of the Moynihan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Dole amendment is set aside.

The clerk will report the amendment to the bill.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DODD, and Mr. BRADLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 919.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT SERVICES UNDER MEDICAID.

(a) PURPOSE OF TITLE XIX.—Section 1901 of the Social Security Act is amended by striking "and" before the number "(2)", and inserting after "self-care," the following:

(b) SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT SERVICES.—Title XIX of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT SERVICES

"SEC. 1927. (a) At the option of the State, the State plan for medical assistance described in section 1902(a) may include as medical assistance, substance abuse treatment services and related case management services (described in subsection (b)) under the plan to all individuals who desire to rid themselves of their substance abuse problem.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—(1) The term 'substance abuse treatment services' includes—

"(A) inpatient substance abuse treatment services, including counseling, which are provided in a hospital (or distant part thereof) or other entity if such entity is legally authorized to provide such treatment under State law;

"(B) outpatient substance abuse treatment services, including counseling, which are provided by a hospital (or distinct part thereof) or other entity if such entity is legally authorized to provide such treatment under State law; and

"(C) substance abuse treatment services, including counseling, which are provided in a residential substance abuse treatment center or other entity if such entity is legally authorized to provide such treatment under services.

"(2) The term 'case management services' means services which will assist individuals eligible under the plan in gaining access to needed medical, social, educational, and other services.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this amendment shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I spoke earlier today about this amendment and need not occupy the time of the Senate at any great length this evening.

I would simply like to read the purpose of the amendment which is self-explanatory. It is "To amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to provide for substance abuse treatment services on request for individuals desiring to rid themselves of substance abuse problems, and for other purposes."

Mr. President, as I have said several times in the last week and again this morning, the central purpose of the drug abuse legislation enacted last year was to provide a balance between the problems, if you like, of law enforcement and the problems of public health when dealing with drug abuse. We clearly have had a very large emphasis on the former, relatively little on the latter.

Last year, we established that we would seek a rough balance between resources and emphasis; that we would recognize we have a public health problem—in this particular case an epidemic—of addiction to cocaine. The addiction—the epidemic—appeared in the Bahamas in 1983. At the time, we were warned by Bahamian physicians, that it would strike the United States. It did in 1985 and we are still reeling as if from Hurricane Hugo; only it does not stop, it still continues.

In the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, we created a director of drug control strategy with two deputies; one, a deputy for demand reduction, and the other for supply reduction. "Demand reduction" is a simple way of saying that in the end we are going to deal with this problem and see to it that people no longer are willing to destroy themselves.

We have 6 years of experience with this particular euphoria that has not had its equivalent in history. When the use of crack first began in the Bahamas it was accompanied by shockingly gruesome psychiatric disorders, which is what immediately brought it to the attention of the doctors at Sandilands Rehabilitation Hospital, who first reported it in the Lancet, a British medical journal.

Medicaid does not provide for treatment of the drug addicts to which the Senate has turned its attention. People arrive at hospitals, as they do in the pattern of this particular addiction, asking for treatment and none is available. Some efforts are made. We said over and over again last year that there is not now an accepted medical procedure for the treatment of cocaine addiction. There is, for heroin use, methadone treatment. And Medicaid will reimburse the cost of methadone treatment in hospitals. But because there is no recognized medical treatment for crack cocaine, there is no reimbursement and, hence, none of the effort that hospitals engage in in this public health emergency—counseling, etc. (which is the only treatment we have at this point)—is reimbursed by the Federal Medicaid Program.

The purpose of this measure is to simply provide for Medicaid reimbursements "for substance abuse treatment services so that treatment on request may be provided to all individuals who desire to rid themselves of substance abuse problems." These individuals would merely exercise their option under law—we wrote treatment on request into the statute last year. This says that when persons request treatment, an institution can ask for Medicaid reimbursement for that treatment.

Mr. President, I do not want to extend what I believe is fairly clear.

The distinguished manager of the legislation, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, asked to be a cosponsor when the measure first came up a week ago.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it is interesting. Sometimes the most important things we do around here are done quietly and quickly and in the clear light of day under—well it is not daytime—but under the glare of the cameras and everyone being able to watch it.

But I want everyone to understand what the Senator from New York is proposing and what he will have done if he succeeds, as I fully expect he will, because so many Republicans as well as Democrats believe he is correct.

He will have, in one fell swoop, done more on the treatment side—which everyone, including the Director of DEA and FBI and the military, et cetera, thinks is by far the most important place along with education—he will have done more in this amendment than we have done in total in the last 17 years that I have been a United States Senator, the last 14 of which I have been spending more time on this issue than I ever hoped to have to. I compliment him for that.

I will make one other comment. People are wondering where this debate is taking place, the Senator from Missouri saying nice things about the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Delaware saying nice things about other Senators. The fact of the matter is there is not much disagreement on this floor when it comes right down to the basic issues related to the drug question.

I want to suggest that of all the people with whom I have worked on this issue, the Senator from New York knows more about the issue of drug abuse than anyone with whom I have spoken, including the so-called experts that I have had before my committee and into my office. I must say to him once again that this single amendment is probably the single most significant thing that we are going to do on dealing with the drug issue this year. I compliment him for it and I am delighted he is allowing me to be a cosponsor.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I, too, wish to commend the Senator from New York. Having the means available to provide drug abuse treatment for those who cannot afford it makes a great deal of sense.

I just had the opportunity to read this amendment. I am struck by the important subject which it covers.

I must say that we are not ready to accept the amendment yet. There are some on this side who want to take a look at the amendment to determine the technical aspects of it. We, therefore, need to give them some additional time to consider it and to determine how it will interact with other statutes and with other provisions in the law.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I checked this with the minority leader and with the former manager and present manager of this bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the Dole amendment, because it is no longer relevant in light of the compromise we just passed, be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEINZ. Reserving the right to object, and it is not my intention to object, what then, if I might ask the manager, will be the pending business?

Mr. BIDEN. There would be no pending business. I should not say that. I ask the Chair that question. I do not know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business at this time is the Moynihan amendment No. 919. The Dole amendment was set aside in order to take up amendment 919. So the pending business of the Senate would remain amendment 919.

Mr. HEINZ. If I might inquire, reserving the right to object further, what is the anticipated disposition of the Moynihan amendment?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, my understanding is we will probably have an agreement and I hope not even require a rollcall vote on that amendment. The Republican side is checking it out. Two other people on a relevant committee are looking at it. So I would expect there to be no rollcall vote. I would further anticipate asking unanimous consent that the Moynihan amendment be temporarily set aside so we could deal with the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objections? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (numbered 910) was withdrawn.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we temporarily lay aside the Moynihan amendment for purposes of considering the Heinz amendment. Upon disposition of the Heinz amendment, we would go back to the Moynihan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 920

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I thank Senator BIDEN, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the manager of this legislation, for his courtesy and his unanimous-consent agreement that has allowed me to present this amendment.

In brief, Mr. President, the amendment that I will send to the desk for myself, Senators BOND, D'AMATO, LOTT, and perhaps other Senators, permits any public housing agency to exclude from its grievance hearing procedure any grievance concerning an eviction for criminal activity. It would permit the public housing authorities to proceed directly to judicial eviction in a State landlord-tenant court subject to the due process requirements, of course, of the 14th amendment. It permits more expeditious eviction of criminals who prey on public housing residents by the sale and use of drugs and with the associated violence and other criminal activities that too often accompany the sale and use of drugs.

The other element of the amendment is that it also requires the public housing authorities to inform the post office when a tenant has been evicted. The reason for that is simply to stop the drug dealers from returning to their former places of criminal activity in order to get their mail. Frequently, that mail contains checks. Some of them may be government issue. If that part of the amendment is adopted, they will, of course, have to go to the post office, not to a place where women are trying to raise children in as secure an environment as possible.

Mr. President, I have had a number of personal experiences visiting public housing communities in my home State of Pennsylvania. One occasion involved Secretary Kemp, who came up to Pennsylvania and visited the Richard Alan Homes community. When he was there, he noticed four men seated around a barrel in which there was a fire. He asked the tenant management leader who those people were. It was explained to him that the four men were crack dealers and that their presence was as common as cold in February, which it then was.

I wish I could say that is an uncommon occurrence, but to the contrary, it is daily—daily, not just at Richard Alan Homes but virtually every public housing community across this Nation. The families who are trying to raise children in that federally assisted housing are particularly at risk. They are at risk because having drug dealers around is dangerous. At one housing community I visited there is scarcely a night where there is not shooting in the street right next to the houses in which people are trying to raise their families.

It is an attraction for other criminal activities and, worst of all, it invites young people to be tempted into the high stakes, high risk, but sometimes high return, game of drug dealing.

I do not know if anybody remembers, but in August there was a sensational report out of Lebanon, PA, where some children in a playground were found playing with grass clippings and sugar in little plastics bags, and somebody had the presence of mind to ask them what they are doing. The answer was, "We are playing drug dealer." These, Mr. President, were 6-, 7-, and 8-year-old kids. To have the real game of dealing in crack and cocaine and marijuana played out in front of them in their front yards is something we should do everything in our power, our legitimate power to stop.

I am a realist. I know we are not going to be able to clear the Nation's streets of drug dealers overnight or even as quickly as we would like, but at the very least we ought to be able to get them, with proper due process protections, out of taxpayer-supported housing just as quickly as possible.

Unfortunately, the present law does not permit us to get them out in many cases any time soon, let alone in any kind of reasonable time frame. What I am producing, expedited eviction procedures, will make certain that drug dealers cannot stick around because of red tape.

Let me take a moment to describe the problem. The problem is that under current law, if someone is accused of even criminal activity, drug-related criminal activity—dealing in drugs—they have a right to what is called an administrative hearing. That administrative hearing and the process that is involved is very lengthy. It can take 6 to 12 months, and it is also nonbinding in this respect.

You get to the end of the process 6 or 12 months later and one of two findings are made. One is that the defendant is found in favor of. At that point, the game is over and no further action can be taken against the tenant that was accused in spite of the fact that the procedures for appointing what is in effect an arbitration panel and choosing, if you will, the third person who is supposed to be impartial or just as random, if you will, as if you chose that third person by lot.

If on the other hand the tenant is found against, one might conclude that, all right, then the tenant is subject to eviction. But that is not the case. What is the case is that the tenant now may be brought to a regular court with all the due process protections and then tried.

The question I simply submit to the Senate is why go through a process that is up to 12 months long that delays the inevitable day in court for just that long? Why not let the public housing authority go directly to court in the first place?

Some people will say, well, public housing authorities do not have to do that. They can seek a waiver of that administrative hearing process. Mr. President, to an extent that is true. There are certain tests that have to be met in order for a public housing authority to seek a waiver. I believe those waivers have to be sought on an tort-by-tort basis. What is it that has to be satisfied? Essentially, the Department of Housing and Urban Affairs has to look at State law. If they discern that State law meets the 14th amendment due process requirement, that is so far so good. Then they have to be subjected to a second test, which is whether or not the State law has an additional due process protection which I will summarize as the right of discovery which grows out of the fifth amendment.

If all those tests are met, then, yes, it is possible to waive the administrative hearing process.

By the way, a wonderful irony is if the answer is "No," if the answer is the State is not entitled to the waiver, guess what happens? The tenant goes through the administrative process and unless they are found in favor of ends up in trial in the same court that the public housing authority was not allowed to get into in the first place.

Mr. President, we have heard of tying ourselves up in knots. What this is doing is wiring drug dealing criminals into public housing by virtue of a nearly infinite amount of red tape.

This is clearly ridiculous.

Secretary Kemp is making very heroic efforts to get as many waivers as he can in as many jurisdictions as he can. But, in fact, I do not think we: First, should have to wait that long; and second, it is a fact that he will not be able to succeed in many jurisdictions.

While that is happening, people who should have been evicted from federally supported housing are not only dealing drugs or whatever it is that is drug-related criminal activity, but somebody who is a honest person, somebody who is a decent person, is being denied the ability to live in that public housing unit.

So talk about a procedure that is overprotective and discriminatory, this one is overprotective of people who are involved with drug-related crimes and it discriminates against people who are not.

It is my hope that my colleagues will adopt this amendment. This is clearly the the right vehicle for it, and it is my hope my colleagues will agree that the time has come to end what is a real ripoff of the taxpayers, a great threat to the people who live in public housing, and which discriminates against people who need housing but currently cannot get it because they are kept out of it by people who are breaking the law.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. We are happy to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has not yet been delivered to the desk.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] for himself, and Mr. BOND, Mr. D'AMATO, and Mr. LOTT proposes an amendment numbered 920.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

SECTION 1. EXCLUSION FROM THE LEASE AND GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE FOR ANY EVICTION OR TERMINATION OF TENANCY FOR CRIMINAL ACTIVITY.

Section 6(k) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting the following: "An agency may exclude from its procedure any grievance concerning an eviction or termination of tenancy for criminal activity, including drug-related criminal activity, in accordance with subsection (L)(5). An agency may exclude from its procedure any other grievance concerning an eviction or termination of tenancy in any jurisdiction which requires that, prior to eviction, a tenant be given a hearing in court which the Secretary determines provides the basic elements of due process.

SEC. 2. NOTIFICATION BY PUBLIC HOUSING AGENCY TO THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE THAT TENANTS HAVE BEEN EVICTED FROM PUBLIC HOUSING FOR DRUG-RELATED CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES.

Section 6 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(n) Where a public housing agency evicted any member of the household from a dwelling unit for engaging in criminal activity the public housing agency shall notify the local post office serving that dwelling unit that the household member is no longer residing in the dwelling unit.".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I respect and understand the desire of the Senator from Pennsylvania for a rollcall vote, but it is the intention of this side to accept the amendment. In the interest of time, there are a number of our colleagues who are at the White House and other places. I know this amendment will have little difficulty. I am prepared to accept the amendment. I hope we would not need a rollcall vote.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I echo the request of the distinguished Senator from Delaware that we not have a rollcall vote.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I cannot hear the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I echo the request of the distinguished Senator from Delaware that we not have a rollcall vote because we are prepared to accept this amendment. It is a good amendment. I want to commend the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania for bringing it up. I think getting it in this bill is a very important legislative approach.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I would just like the RECORD to be clear on a couple of points. I appreciate the managers' willingness to take the amendment. As we all know, there are a variety of ways of taking amendments around here. Sometimes we take amendments, take them to conference, and we all know what that means. Sometimes amendments are adopted with enthusiasm, and total good will. I have every reason to expect that it is the latter category that we are talking about. There has not been anybody who spoke against the amendment. I would presume that means the Senate genuinely understands the amendment and is in support of it.

I represent that notwithstanding the fact there may not be a full House here because I have offered this amendment on one other occasion. It was also taken in that case to conference. No known action has resulted on it.

It is my hope that my colleagues understand that this has not been another trial run, a dry run; that this is the real thing. I hope the manager of the bill will agree with that assessment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware did not speak on this amendment because the Senator from Delaware agrees with it. I was trying to move this thing along. The Senator from Delaware is more familiar than the body would like to know about this issue of drugs and public housing. As a matter of fact, the State of Delaware was the State that set the trend well ahead of the efforts by the Director of HUD or anyone else on this score, so I have no reluctance in supporting the Senator, and I cannot speak for any other Senator, but I expect to be at the conference.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator HATCH.

Mr. HATCH. I feel exactly the same way, and we will fight for this amendment in conference. It is a good amendment, one that shows we are serious about the drug problem. I commend the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania for his efforts in bringing it to our attention and passing it here today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment (No. 920) was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NUNN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia.

AMENDMENT NO. 921

(Purpose: To provide economic antidrug assistance, and for other purposes)

Mr. NUNN. I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be reported.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. NUNN. I will be glad to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it is my understanding—and I apologize for not having spoken earlier—that the pending business before the Senate is the Moynihan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask unanimous consent that we temporarily lay aside the Moynihan amendment until the disposition of the Nunn amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is their objection to setting aside the Moynihan amendment No. 919? Without objection, that amendment is set aside.

The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] proposes an amendment numbered 921.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

SEC. . STUDY OF ANTI-DRUG ASSISTANCE TO THE ANDEAN REGION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the operations of international narcotics trafficking organizations pose a direct threat to the national security of the United States and Latin America;

(2) international narcotics trafficking operations have grown so large and powerful that they threaten the democratic governments of the Andean region;

(3) recent events in Colombia make clear the need for addressing the threat of international narcotics trafficking in Peru and Boliva before situations there further deteriorate;

(4) for any anti-narcotics strategy to work in the Andean region an integrated program of economic development, interdiction and eradication must be developed;

(5) U.S. government anti-narcotics policies toward the Andean region have not in the past been coordinated with our country's trade and economic policies as exemplified by recent negotiations over the international coffee agreement;

(6) any successful strategy for combatting the influence of international narcotics trafficking in the Andean region must address the economic situation in that region;

(7) many of the farmers who produce coca leaf in the Andean region do so as the sole means of economic livelihood for themselves and their families;

(8) many of these farmers would stop growing coca if provided with alternative means to earn a livelihood;

(9) the economic assistance component of an Andean strategy must reduce the political pressures generated by a successful interdiction and eradication program, offset its negative economic impact on the countries' foreign exchange earnings, create jobs for people who lose their livelihood, and in the long run, deal with the region's fundamental structural and development problems;

(10) individual country resources are not adequate to manage the immediate and short-run economic and social issues, much less solve the narcotics problem. Neither will indigenous resources grow fast enough to sustain present levels of development, unless the economies grow briskly and the political systems are stabilized and reinforced;

(11) national, regional and U.S. resources, combined, are also insufficient. The overall effort must be internationalized to include Japan, Canada and Western Europe;

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 60 days after the conclusion of the international conference, known as the International Conference on Combatting Illegal Drug Production, Trafficking, and Use in the Western Hemisphere, required by section 4104 of title IV of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690), or 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever comes first, the President shall report to Congress on

(1) the outcome of the International Conference;

(2) his strategy for increasing economic development to the Andean region, to be used in conjunction with a program of interdiction and eradication;

(3) his program for coordinating trade and economic policies of our government with our nation's overall anti-narcotics strategy for the Andean region;

(4) his strategy for internationalizing the economic development assistance to the Andean region in order to include assistance from Japan, Canada and Western Europe;

(5) the cost over the next five years for a program of economic assistance that would provide an alternative to coca production in the Andean region;

(6) the cost over the next five years of the eradiction and interdiction components of the Andean strategy;

(7) the feasibility and cost of purchasing the entire coca crop in the Andean region, and;

(8) any recommendations for the modification of U.S. debt strategy to take into account the unique and exceptional burden imposed on the Andean economics by terrorism and drug trafficking.

(c) BUDGET REQUEST.—The President shall submit to the Congress, within 30 days after submission of the report required by subsection (b), supplemental budget requests for fiscal year 1990 and 1991 covering the United States share of the cost of such additional economic assistance as is necessary to carry out his Andean anti-narcotics strategy.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I will not take but a few minutes here tonight. This is an important amendment. I know there are other important amendments colleagues are waiting for. This amendment highlights the importance of addressing our Nation's cocaine problem at the source, namely the Andean region of Latin America. It is based upon an over 1-year study by staff on the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, and hearings that we had last week, 3 days of hearings, where we had William Bennett, the drug czar, as well as the ambassadors from Colombia, Peru, and Bolivia.

I think it is clear from those hearings, and from a very detailed staff report, that the source countries provide perhaps the most well-defined target of opportunity for stopping the flow of cocaine into this country. Nature and historical accident has placed production for virtually all of the cocaine that comes into the United States in three countries: Peru, with approximately 60 percent of the production; Bolivia, approximately 30 percent of the production; and Colombia, approximately 10 percent of the production with, of course, an awful lot of the manufacturing being done in Colombia.

Although large in area, most of the coca leaf that is grown to produce this cocaine comes from two valleys in the Andean region, the Huallaga Valley in Peru and the Chapare Valley in Bolivia. Logic and common sense tells us that stopping cocaine in these countries is far cheaper and more effective than waiting until the drugs that are derived from cocaine arrive in the United States.

Mr. President, specifically, this amendment restates many of the conclusions reached at our hearing and calls for a detailed report by the President on our country's Andean drug strategy. The reporting date is triggered by the conclusion of a conference on combating illegal drugs into the Western Hemisphere that was required by section 4104 of last year's Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, or 180 days after date of enactment.

The report requires the President to detail the outcome of the conference; the economic component of his Andean strategy; his proposal for enlisting our allies in providing economic assistance to the region; his proposal for coordinating our economic and trade policies with our antidrug strategy; the 5-year cost for increased economic assistance, interdiction and eradication; the feasibility of purchasing and destroying the coca leaf crop from the Andes, and any recommendation for debt restructuring to assist in our overall antinarcotic strategy.

In addition, this amendment requires that the President submit any supplemental budget request to carry out this Andean strategy 30 days after submission of the report.

Let me give one example, Mr. President. When Director Bennett was before our committee last week, we asked the question about the coffee agreement that has caused so much concern in Colombia. We are increasing the aid to Colombia by about $60 million in economic assistance to help them in their fight against drugs, but lo and behold, at the same time we are doing that with one hand of government, the other hand of government is negotiating or failing to negotiate an international coffee agreement, which takes away $100 million from the Colombian economy. So we are giving them $60 million, patting ourselves on the back for having a strategy. On the other hand, the coffee agreement, which is going down the tube unless something is changed, is going to cost some $100 million to their treasury.

We asked Director Bennett if he had been consulted about the coffee agreement, and the answer was no. We then had the State Department official in charge of the whole drug effort in the State Department and asked him if he had been consulted about the coffee agreement. The answer was no, that neither one had been consulted; they were not coordinated.

We thought when we set up the drug czar, that it was going to encompass a very broad jurisdiction. We thought, perhaps many of us did, he would be on the Cabinet. But here what we have is a region of the world that is having very severe economic problems, runaway inflation, all sorts of problems with the lack of economic development. In Peru, there is a Communist insurgency going on there. And any time you tackle the coca problem, you drive the farmers producing that coca right into the hands of the insurgents.

Whatever we do has to be coordinated. A drug strategy that does not fit into a broader economic strategy for that region will not and cannot work. I do not contend that we can go down and pour a whole lot of money there, but we are going to have to frame an economic strategy and get the countries of Europe involved, the Japanese involved, and we are going to have to get involved ourselves, if not with direct aid, at least with an overall economic development plan that takes into account trade relations and others.

So this report—and that is what it is, a report—requires the President to focus on this. The way our Government is structured, it can only happen at the Cabinet level. Only the President can look at these broad policies of trade that are so important. I am absolutely convinced after looking into this for a year, after having detailed hearings, there is no possibility that our antidrug efforts can work in Peru or Bolivia or Colombia, unless the drug program fits into a broader economic strategy.

If we do not watch out, we will end up having Communist insurgencies in all of those countries, as we try to crack down on the drug situation, which we must do. We have to drive down the price of coca, where it is grown, while we drive up the price on the streets of America. Those seem to be contradictions, but they are not.

If we are going to have any success with eradication, we have to drive down the price, and we have to have crop substitutions. All of those require economic strategy, and that is what this amendment would require.

Mr. President, this amendment highlights the importance of addressing our Nation's cocaine problem at its source—namely in the Andean region of Latin America. It is based upon an over year-long investigation by the staff of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations that culminated last week in Subcommittee hearings. The testimony at those hearings underscored several important points that must be considered in targeting drug production in the source countries.

First, the source countries provide perhaps our most well-defined target of opportunity for stopping the flow of cocaine into this country. Nature and historical accident has placed production for virtually all of the cocaine that comes into the United States in three countries: Peru, approximately 60 percent; Bolivia, approximately 30 percent; and Colombia, approximately 10 percent. Although rather large in area, most of the coca leaf that is grown to produce this cocaine comes from two valleys in the Andean region—the Huallaga in Peru and the Chapare in Bolivia.

Logic and common sense tells us that stopping coca in these countries may be far cheaper and more effective than trying to do so once it arrives in the United States.

Second, we must not allow this focused area of attack to lull us into believing that the battle in those areas will be an easy one. Though the production of coca leaf is relatively easy to isolate, geographically speaking, the economic, social, and political factors which have given rise to that production are incredibly complex and intertwined. Moreover, it is impossible to address any one of these factors without seriously impacting the others.

Peru is an obvious example of this: a country where overwhelming economic problems have fueled the coca economy, which in turn has bolstered the power of a growing political insurgency. On the economic front, Peru's gross domestic product shrank 28 percent in the first quarter of 1989 with inflation running at over 25 percent per month. Aggravating the situation has been Peru's inability to make debt repayments which has triggered restrictions on United States and international assistance. In the absence of viable economic alternatives, the coca economy has mushroomed. On the political front, the coca farmers have sought protection from the Maoist insurgency, the Shining Path, which, according to hearing testimony, now controls approximately one-third of the country.

Third, in that context, witnesses at our hearings were unanimous in their belief that increased economic development will be the single most important ingredient of any successful antidrug effort in the region. Coca eradication alone, without the simultaneous development of economic alternatives, will serve only to further the cause of insurgencies like the Shining Path.

Fourth, despite those facts and the long history of U.S. experience in the region, amazingly little attention has been paid to the region over the last 10 years, especially in terms of U.S. economic development assistance. In 1987, for example, U.S. antinarcotics assistance for the Andes amounted to less than 1 percent of the amount the U.S. spent on all antidrug activities. For 1989, foreign aid to all of Latin America including the Andean region amounted to a very small percentage of our entire foreign aid budget. The National Drug Control Strategy, recently announced by President Bush and Drug Czar William Bennett, increases law enforcement and military assistance to the region for 1990, but fails to recommend any increased economic development assistance prior to 1991.

Fifth, this lack of adequate economic development assistance has been compounded by our Government's failure to coordinate other relevant aspects of our economic and trade policies with our antidrug efforts in the region. During our hearings, the Colombian Ambassador to the United States expressed his country's outrage that the United States, while urging Colombia to end its lucrative cocaine trade, was simultaneously contributing to the breakdown of negotiations on the international agreement on coffee, which is Colombia's largest legal export. The result has been a decline in the price of coffee from $1.46 to 83 cents per pound, with a net loss of as much as $500 million in Colombian exports, far more than the United States is spending in antidrug assistance to Colombia.

During the course of our hearings, Drug Czar William Bennett testified that, to his recollection, he had not been consulted regarding potential United States action on the coffee agreement, despite its obvious impact on Colombian, as well as United States, antidrug efforts. Moreover, the lead official for antidrug operations at the State Department testified that he, too, had not been consulted, despite the fact that U.S. negotiations on the agreement were handled by another office within the State Department.

On the final day of our hearings, and following his own discussions on this point with Colombia's President Barco, President Bush announced that the administration will revisit its stance on the International Coffee Agreement in light of its obvious relevance to the antidrug effort. While I am encouraged by that announcement on that particular issue, I have seen no action taken to prevent this same lack of coordination in the economic and antidrug policy areas in the future.

As a result, I am today introducing an amendment which seeks to focus the President's attention on the importance of not only economic development assistance but also closer coordination of U.S. economic and antidrug initiatives in the region.

Specifically, the amendment restates many of the conclusions reached at our hearings and calls for a detailed report by the President on our country's Andean drug strategy. The reporting date is triggered by the conclusion of a conference on combating illegal drugs in the Western Hemisphere that was required by section 4104 of last year's Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, or 180 days after date of enactment. The report requires the President to detail:

The outcome of the conference;

The economic component of his Andean strategy;

His proposal for enlisting our allies in providing economic assistance to the region;

His proposal for coordinating our economic and trade policies with our antidrug strategy;

The 5-year cost for increased economic assistance, interdiction, and eradication;

The feasibility of purchasing and destroying the coca leaf crop from the Andes; and

Any recommendations for debt restructuring to assist in our overall antinarcotics strategy.

In addition, this amendment requests that the President submit any supplemental budget requests to carry out his Andean strategy with the budget required by section 1006 of Public Law 100-690.

Mr. President, in my view this amendment, and the report which it mandates, will help to ensure that we not repeat the mistakes of the past in U.S. antidrug efforts in the Andean region. I urge my colleagues to support the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, as I said on one other occasion this afternoon and this evening, we sometimes pass amendments here and move on amendments that we fail to understand how significant they are. This is a truly significant amendment. The fact of the matter is, those of us who have had the opportunity to read the report of the Senator from Georgia, that he did underscore, without any question, that the entire notion of eradication, interdiction, and for that matter, extradition, hinge upon whether or not the peasant farmers in those countries, particularly Peru and Bolivia, even more than Colombia, have any way in which they can make a living.

We are talking about the difference between 600 and 1,000 a year total for these folks for this idea. Every one of our Ambassadors came up and they went before the hearing of the Senator from Georgia and they sat in my office for the better part of a couple of hours. These are our Ambassadors.

They said: "Look, no matter what you do if the net result is that the peasants who we are asking to stop growing the coca, if those peasants see only one thing, a crackdown on drugs and drug organizations by their governments and a loss of their income at the same time, they believe there is a correlation between the effort to deal with drugs and their income." That was true of even the coffee farmers, and in this case it has no relationship except that coincidentally, as the Senator from Georgia points out, we have one hand not letting the other hand know what it is doing in this Government.

I want to emphasize and reemphasize what the Senator from Georgia has pointed out. The failure to have a—not coca—coffee agreement is costing about a half billion to the economies of those countries. We are not coming even close to providing that kind of aid.

So, the Senator from Georgia is right. When he and I and others on this floor worked on and passed the drug czar legislation we not only assumed but we wrote into the law that there should be this coordination.

So it is not a failure to have this coordinated responsibility residing at the right spot. It is a failure of following the law. It is not intentional on the part of Bill Bennett. It is not intentional on anyone's part.

I would like to conclude by suggesting the following:

We have had this law on the books now for roughly 10 months and we have only attempted two significant efforts with regard to the Andean nations. One is we passed with the help of the Senator from Florida who I see on the floor, and others, into law last year and the money to help protect Colombian judges, $5 million, a paltry sum. None of that money got there to protect those judges because the State Department was not cooperating with the DEA, who was not cooperating with, and the list went on. It went from that $5 million fiasco to a failure to understand what a half billion loss in a coffee crop means to that region.

So although this is a study, this is, I respectfully suggest to my friend from Georgia—he is being modest—more than a study. This requires the next time the administration comes to us that they have a strategy, and what is lacking is a strategy. There is rhetoric but no strategy.

I cannot thank the Senator from Georgia enough for taking leadership in this and making sure that next time out we have some knowledge of what our total actions are upon a region. The President, God bless him and others, are heralding this great Andean plan, military and economic and drug related, and in its totality it does not equal the loss that is occurring to those Andean countries as a consequence of our inability, unwillingness or failure to move the coffee agreement.

So I thank the Senator and I strongly support the passage of this.

As the manager I am prepared to accept the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia.

AMENDMENT NO. 921 (AS MODIFIED)

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Delaware. I am told the staff has talked to the staff of the Senator from Utah and the staff of the Senator from Delaware, and there has been a couple of language changes on the amendment. As to the original amendment I sent to the desk there are a few language changes.

I send a corrected copy to the desk and ask that this amendment be substituted for the other and be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify the amendment. The amendment is so modified.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

SEC. . STUDY OF ANTI-DRUG ASSISTANCE TO THE ANDEAN REGION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the operations of international narcotics trafficking organizations pose a direct threat to the national security of the United States and Latin America;

(2) International narcotics trafficking operations have grown so large and powerful that they threaten the democratic governments of the Andean region;

(3) recent events in Colombia make clear the need for addressing the threat of international narcotics trafficking in Peru and Bolivia before situations there further deteriorate;

(4) for any anti-narcotics strategy to work in the Andean region an integrated program of economic development, interdiction and eradication must be developed;

(5) U.S. government anti-narcotics policies toward the Andean region have not in the past been coordinated with our country's trade and economic policies as exemplified by recent negotiations over the international coffee agreement;

(6) any successful strategy for combatting the influence of international narcotics trafficking in the Andean region must address the economic situation in that region;

(7) many of the farmers who produce coca leaf in the Andean region do so as the sole means of economic livelihood for themselves and their families;

(8) many of these farmers would stop growing coca if provided with alternative means to earn a livelihood;

(9) the economic assistance component of an Andean strategy must reduce the political pressures generated by a successful interdiction and eradication program, offset its negative economic impact on the countries foreign exchange earnings, create jobs for people who lose their livelihood, and in the long run, deal with the region's fundamental structural and development problems;

(10) individual country resources are not adequate to manage the immediate and short-run economic and social issues, much less solve the narcotics problem. Neither will indigenous resources grow fast enough to sustain present levels of development, unless the economies grow briskly and the political systems are stabilized and reinforced;

(11) national, regional and U.S. resources, combined, are also insufficient. The overall effort must be internationalized to include Japan, Canada and Western Europe;

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 60 days after the conclusion of the international conference, known as the International Conference on Combatting Illegal Drug Production, Trafficking, and Use in the Western Hemisphere, required by section 4104 of title IV of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690), or 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever comes first, the President shall report to Congress on

(1) the outcome of the International Conference;

(2) his strategy for increasing economic development to the Andean region, to be used in conjuction with a program of interdiction and eradication;

(3) his program for coordinating trade and economic policies of our government with our nation's overall anti-narcotics strategy for the Andean region;

(4) his strategy for internationalizing the economic development assistance to the Andean region in order to include assistance from Japan, Canada and Western Europe;

(5) the cost over the next five years for a program of economic assistance that would provide an alternative to coca production in the Andean region;

(6) the cost over the next five years of the eradication and interdiction components of the Andean strategy;

(7) the feasibility and cost of purchasing the entire coca crop in the Andean region, and;

(8) any recommendations for the modification of U.S. debt strategy to take into account the unique and exceptional burden imposed on the Andean economies by terrorism and drug trafficking.

(c) BUDGET REQUEST.—The President shall submit to the Congress, with the submission of the budget required by section 1006 of Public Law 100-690, such supplemental budget requests for fiscal year 1990 and 1991 covering the United States share of the cost of additional economic assistance as is necessary to carry out his Andean anti-narcotics strategy.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NUNN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I have reviewed the amendment and I think the Senator has done a singular service bringing this to the attention of this body and the President of the United States for the study he requires.

As to No. 5, am I correct in assuming that the Senator is not expecting the United States to modify its position with regard to the international coffee agreement.

Mr. NUNN. Yes. This amendment does not require a modification of the position. The amendment does ask the President to reexamine the overall trade relations including the coffee agreement but there is nothing that basically dictates the substance of any outcome.

Mr. HATCH. Nor any expression of dissatisfaction with the current approach toward the international coffee agreement.

Mr. NUNN. I would say the implication of having no coordination on the drug question is certainly there. I am not in any way trying to direct the outcome in this amendment of the coffee agreement. We do think that ought to be considered in this context of our fight against drugs.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have reviewed this amendment and I think there has been much time and effort put into drafting this amendment and to come up with these ideas and these suggestions for the President of the United States and for the Congress.

So I think there is a great deal of good that can come from the President's submitting to Congress within 30 days after submission of the report required by subsection (b), the requisites that the distinguished Senator from Georgia is requesting.

I appreciate the overall approach that he is making, and although I think some might differ with one or more assertions here I think it is an excellent amendment. I recommend that we adopt this amendment and accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Utah.

I will not take but one more moment here. I wish to note that the amendment is cosponsored by Senator LIEBERMAN of Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from California, Senator WILSON.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Georgia on a good amendment. It is the kind of amendment I think will substantially enhance the present Andean society.

It is necessary to know the consequences of the sort of economic dislocation that will inevitably take place as we seek to wean the farmers and peasants away from the cultivation of a crop which to them is simply a cash crop but has had devastating impact upon our youth. And the report that he seeks and hearings he held I think are a very, very sound step toward achieving the kind of knowledge that will permit us to go forward with that Andean strategy.

As pointed out I think with simple eloquence at the beginning of the statement, it is a strategy that is aimed at interdicting at the source of supply and hopefully as we in this country work on the reduction of demand those two events in combination hold the greatest promise for actually making a significant change in this traffic. So I think it is a fine amendment. I ask that I be added as a cosponsor.

Mr. NUNN. I am delighted. I thank my friend from California. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from California be added as cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I alert my colleagues, and particularly my colleague from Georgia who I look to for help on this. As part of that economic plan the Ambassadors, our Ambassadors to the Andean countries and the Andean Ambassadors to the United States as well as the drug director, have all favorably indicated that a plan for swapping debt for drugs is a way of providing significant input for the economic growth of those countries and that is buying on the secondary market to oversimplify it in the interest of time the debt that those countries owe to banks generally, to the American Government and other governments, getting our NATO allies as well as the Japanese to be involved.

We could very well with a relatively one-time infusion of money among the drug-consuming nations purchase the vast bulk of the debt of the Andean nations and make a deal with them literally and not figuratively. They have been seeking money, and they have not been paying the interest, in terms of rural development and crop substitution. We would be ready to tear up the mortgage at some point down the line.

I invite the Senator's participation in that and hope he and I would be able to work together to convince our friends that that may be a worthwhile way to go.

Mr. NUNN. I think that is a good idea. I would be delighted to work with the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment (No. 921) as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we lay aside for one more time the Moynihan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, No. 919, will be laid aside.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois, Senator SIMON.

AMENDMENT NO. 922

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk.

SEC. 79. PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES.

Rule 24(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended to read as follows:

"(b) PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES.—If the offense charged is punishable by death, each side is entitled to 20 peremptory challenges. If the offense charged is punishable by imprisonment for more than one year, each side is entitled to 8 peremptory challenges. If the offense charged is punishable by imprisonment for not more than one year or by fine or both, each side is entitled to 3 peremptory challenges. If there is more than one defendant, the court may allow both sides additional peremptory challenges: Provided, That the Government shall not have more challenges than the total allocated to all defendants. The court may permit multiple defendants to exercise peremptory challenges separately or jointly.".

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, this amendment is a very simple one. It contains three things: One is some technical amendments that the committee staff believes are necessary.

Second, it contains some bail reform. It says that with very rare exceptions where the judge can spell this out, if you are convicted of drug trafficking, you cannot any longer just post bond and walk the streets. You can appeal, you bet, but you stay in prison while you appeal.

We have had a situation where all over this Nation a great many people have posted bond and then just disappeared. In Cook County, IL, alone, we have had over 900 last year who did this precise thing.

The third thing this bill does is it increases the penalty for the use of weapons—sawed-off shotguns, sawed-off rifles, or a bomb—an additional penalty, increases that penalty from 5 to 10 years.

I believe this is acceptable on both sides. I would appreciate a favorable vote, obviously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BREAUX). Is there further debate on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we accept the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. I compliment him on it. It is an important addition to an overall strategy. I compliment him and I am happy to accept the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Reserving the right to object, I would just like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Is this the agreed-upon amendment that the Department of Justice has reviewed and agreed to?

Mr. SIMON. That is correct. The Department of Justice has agreed to this. I have accepted certain modifications at their suggestion.

Mr. HATCH. It is my understanding that that is so. If that is so, then I do not think we have any objection to it either. I would recommend that it be adopted.

I commend the Senator for it.

Mr. SIMON. I thank the Senator and I appreciate his support.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the wiretap provision contained in amendment No. 922. I brought this matter to the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and am very pleased that he supports my proposed change in the wiretap statute. If enacted, this provision will help protect thousands of law enforcement officers who risk their lives in undercover criminal investigations.

It recently came to my attention that there are substantial gaps in the federal wiretap statute. First, the current statute explicitly regulates only law enforcement's use of information obtained from lawful wiretaps. Therefore, it fails to cover persons who are unaffiliated with law enforcement agencies, such as prosecutors, court personnel, and perhaps criminals who may have access to police information. Second, the current statute's general prohibition against disclosure of wiretap information applies only where such disclosure is designed to obstruct the interception of a particular communication. Thus, disclosures made for other reasons, such as exposing an investigation or receiving a bribe, are not expressly proscribed. My proposed provision will close these gaps in the wiretap statute by criminalizing any unauthorized disclosures made by any person of information obtained through a lawful wiretap.

Law enforcement officers need assurance that U.S. attorneys will have clear statutory authority under which to prosecute persons who disclose confidential wiretap information and thereby jeopardize sensitive and dangerous criminal investigations. The wiretap provision in the amendment under consideration will help give law enforcement officers the assurance they deserve.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment (No. 922) was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to the bill?

Is there further debate on the pending amendment?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, this amendment is in four parts. It deals with a subject that I have found myself dealing with now for years and years—and we have almost got it right—and that is forfeiture, the forfeiture of the ill-begotten gains. We have made a great deal of progress. But my amendment makes several useful and I believe important changes in the law as Senator THURMOND, Senator HATCH, I, and others rewrote it some years ago.

In the past 5 years, since the passage of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, the forfeiture of assets of drug traffickers has become an indispensable tool in the war on drugs. Every agency will tell you that—local, statewide, and Federal. The Justice Department estimates that in the current fiscal year, $470 million—almost a half a billion dollars—will be deposited into the asset forfeiture fund and $193 million of that will be shared with State and local law enforcement agencies, who I might note parenthetically, in turn use that to reinvest in their police agencies to wage this war on drugs.

My amendment makes the following enhancements to this very successful program: First, it permits up to $10 million of the amount deposited into the fund to be used to buy weapons and body armor for Federal law enforcement officers.

Mr. President, I know that some suggest that I find myself always doing the bidding of the police and the FBI and the DEA. I do in large part because they are the ones who are getting shot at, shot and occasionally killed. And the irony is that the Federal law enforcement agencies find themselves outgunned and in many cases incapable of rapidly moving to provide themselves with the body armor as well as weapons to counteract the very drug folks that they are going up against. All this would do is allow them to take within the fund that they already participate in up to $10 million to buy body armor and weapons for Federal law enforcement officers.

The second part of the amendment repeals the provision in the 1988 drug bill that inhibits the sharing of forfeited assets with State and local law enforcement agencies. The Senate acted favorably on this amendment last week, but I include it again because of the importance in making sure that it is enacted as soon as possible.

We unanimously, I believe, voted for it just several days ago. It is repetitious but it is repetitious only in the sense that if this legislation becomes law before the other, we will have in fact rectified an inequity that was not intended when we wrote the law some several years ago.

Third, the amendment makes certain changes to the way forfeiture of currency is handled. We all saw on television, along with that 20-ton bust of cocaine in Los Angeles, if I am not mistaken, there was about $10 million in cash that was seized—a significant amount of cash. That is not at all unusual—the amount is unusual—but that is not at all unusual when there are assets seized. On many occasions the assets seized is the profit from the ill-begotten activity.

What this would do, this embodies the recommendation of the General Accounting Office to handle forfeiture of currency through an administrative process rather than through the courts.

Right now, in order to be able to have those forfeited assets go to the appropriate police agencies for use in their reinvestment in the war against drug traffickers, et al, it would short-circuit the process and allow that to be done administratively. All the safeguards relative to the handling of that money and the illegal diversion of it by any police agency stay in place. They are all there.

This just merely enables the police agencies, under the otherwise clearly laid out regulations relating to forfeiture, to be able to get to that money more quickly, if not claimed.

Finally, the amendment contains a number of very useful amendments to existing laws. Among other things these amendments would permit the forfeiture of property used to commit a foreign drug offense. It would permit the forfeiture of personal property, like home computers, used to commit other drug offenses, and allow the sharing of forfeited property with foreign countries that assist the United States in drug cases.

Essentially what I am attempting to do here, Mr. President, is set up the same framework that has been so successful with State and local agencies. It is amazing how much more cooperation we get at both ends, at all spectrums, when each of the agencies participating, State, local, Federal, or foreign police organization, is helping to make the bust, and knowing that they will share in the proceeds so that they can replenish their efforts to fight the drug war.

It has been successful. That model I want to make available to major, potentially multibillion-dollar, operations that take place, involving other police agencies in other countries.

So, Mr. President, we have come a long way. When I first rewrote the forfeiture law, we were not to have anything forfeited to the State unless we could specifically trace the specific dollar. We had to prove, for example, that the dollar seized, or that the profit made by a drug dealer, literally went in to buy this particular automobile, or that particular house.

Now all we have to do is prove that they made $5 million, and there is $5 million worth of assets they won. We have made much progress. I truly believe this is a significant help. The FBI, the DEA, and all the police agencies in the country that I am aware of support the various positions of this amendment. And, I might add, to answer a question often asked: It costs no money. It costs no money. It improves the functioning of justice, but it costs no money.

I do not know. I think this is something that my colleagues can accept, but I am not certain. I will yield to my friend from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Allow me to ask just a few questions of my colleague from Delaware. We have talked with the Justice Department on this tonight. They have expressed some grave concerns because, No. 1, they do not want to be told how they should spend money. I can appreciate that. I think the distinguished Senator from Delaware has probably spent as much time in trying to ascertain what should be done with these forfeiture funds as anybody. But that may be a problem. My colleague is specifying where these funds can go.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if I can answer that question, of the total of a half a billion dollars' worth of funds collected, I am specifying where up to $10 million of it can go.

I might add, in the past we used to specify where all of it could go. This legislation, this forfeiture, this circumstance under which the agency can have this money, is a product of congressional legislating. We are not micromanaging. This is something that the agencies want very badly. They do not have to spend any of it, but they can spend up to $10 million of it. So it is not a directive that they must. But it is a directive that they can, if they wish, up to $10 million.

Mr. HATCH. Let me suggest to my colleague, that sounds reasonable to me, but there are enough objections on this side because they are concerned about a whole raft of people coming in here demanding to spend the remaining money in certain delineated ways. Justice would object to that. I do not blame Justice.

I do not have any problem with $10 million out of half a billion, but, Mr. President, my colleague has come before us tonight with several amendments. Several proposals, such as this particular amendment dealing with forfeiture, which may very well have merit. From my experience with him in this area, most of his suggestions have a great deal of merit.

I have a great deal of respect for him and his viewpoints in this area, and generally agree. I would like to go with him on this as well. However, this is the first time that anybody on this side has seen this language. It was only a short while ago and none of us have had the opportunity to analyze even this provision.

So, some of my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee have expressed concerns about moving forward on proposals that the committee itself has not considered or at least they have not had adequate time to examine. I have to say again that Justice does have problems with us up here directing how the funds should be used because they believe that they need the flexibility to use these forfeiture funds in the best interests of the war against drugs.

I do believe the distinguished Senator from Delaware would agree with me that they will do a good job with the utilization of the forfeiture funds. Again I acknowledge he is only asking for a direction of utilization of $10 million, but I think we are going to need more time if we want to clear this amendment on our side. I would ask him to withhold until we have a little more time to see if I can get it cleared on our side.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield I will make two points.

Mr. HATCH. Surely.

Mr. BIDEN. One, the Senator from Delaware has been one who has attempted to give flexibility. For example, in the drug czar bill we provided flexibility for the drug czar.

I moved we provide him $150 million worth of flexibility to deal with these forfeited funds. I emphasize again, we are not directing that they spend $10 million. It permits up to $10 million of the amount deposited in the fund to be used to buy weapons and body armor.

The Senator from Delaware has no intention of backing off the amendment. But the Senator from Delaware also knows the good-faith efforts made by the Senator from Utah and, although we are going to begin to stack things up here, the Senator from Delaware will agree to temporarily lay aside the amendment and to see if we can work something out. If not, we may just have to have a rollcall vote at some point.

Mr. HATCH. I appreciate it and if that is so, if he is not directing where these funds should go, let me run it by some of Senator THURMOND's staff, they are concerned about it. I would like to get this broken free. We will also chat with the Justice Department and try to clear this, in good faith, on our side. If we cannot, the Senator certainly has a right to have a rollcall vote on it and we will go from there.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I ask unanimous consent the Biden amendment on forfeiture be laid aside.

AMENDMENT NO. 919

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the Moynihan amendment. The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] is recognized.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished comanager of the legislation, the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] be added as a cosponsor.

"(A) athletic activities;

"(B) community service activities;

"(C) activities involving arts, crafts, and other programs to stimulate creativity among latchkey children; and

"(D) educational instruction in subjects otherwise not available during the normal school day such as foreign languages or programs designed to improve a student's ability to resist involvement with substance abuse.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'latchkey children' means elementary and secondary school age children who are unsupervised by an adult for more than 11 hours per week before school or after school, or on a regular basis on weekends or during the summer when school is not in session.".

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have been involved in many aspects of our antidrug effort including interdiction and law enforcement. As chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on the District of Columbia, I have worked hard to put together a law enforcement and treatment program for the District which will work.

This amendment to address the problem of a higher risk of drug use among latchkey children is an important component of our antidrug war. Nationally it is estimated that between 2 and 6 million children under the age of 13 lack any adult supervision before and after school. A recent study found that eighth grade students who cared for themselves 11 or more hours per week were twice as likely to engage in alcohol and substance abuse as were their fellow students who had at least one parent in the home after school.

In most cases, these children return to an empty home, because their parents must work, or because they come from the growing number of single-family households where the parent is in the work force. In still other households, parental supervision is unavailable because the parents themselves are involved in substance abuse.

My proposal provides alternatives for those children who would otherwise remain without activities to occupy their time after school, on the weekends, and during the summer. It would provide them with opportunities for self-enrichment that will help them resist peer pressure that frequently leads to substance and alcohol abuse. It will provide them with opportunities for recreational activities and community sevice that would not otherwise be present. This provision does not mandate that all school districts develop programs to address the latchkey child, but it will provide the resources for those who chose to.

Mr. President, I know firsthand of the need for adoption of effective approaches to ending drug abuse. I have visited the social service agencies, public housing projects, detoxification centers, and crack houses in my State. I have seen cocaine babies and spent time talking to the nurses who care for them. They all tell horrific tales of drug abuse and ruined lives. We must put together effective programs to keep our children off children off drugs. We have to do more than just hand them a pamphlet which tells them not to do drugs.

In summary, if we hope to see dramatic progress toward reduced drug abuse in our society, we must begin with our children. To achieve this goal, we must look at the world from the perspective of the child and the influences which threaten involvement with drugs. The latchkey problem at the elementary and secondary school level is one aspect. If we develop effective programs, we can turn this increased time when parents must be away from their children into an asset for our society by structuring activities which help develop talents and promote community service. This investment in our children will pay us the richest of rewards as we look to our future.

I urge the adoption of this amendment.

I thank the managers of the bill for their consideration. Mr. President. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think it is a very positive addition to this legislation. I compliment the Senator from Washington. We are prepared to accept the amendment on this side.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment is a very good amendment. It adds language to allow funding to be spent both before and after school, summer and weekend programs for latchkey children. I think it is a very thoughtful and compassionate worthwhile, workable, and good amendment. So we will accept it on this side as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment (No. 925) was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Biden amendment on forefeiture be laid aside again for consideration of an amendment that I will send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 926

Mr. BIDEN. I will be very brief. This is something with almost unanimity on. The amendment provides two provisions which passed the Senate in 1988 and were not acted upon by the House. The first embodies the provision of S. 327, the Federal Public Corruptions statute that I introduced earlier this year with the bipartisan support of several Senators and the strong endorsement of Attorney General Thornburgh. This statute restores the ability of the Federal prosecutors to bring criminal charges in cases involving the corruption of State and local officials, and of the election process in any State. This is an extremely important measure and should be enacted as soon as possible.

The second provision relates to the corruption of law enforcement officers and other officials in connection with drug trafficking and makes it a Federal offense for anyone to corrupt such an officer in the furtherance of drug dealings. Unfortunately the corruption of law officers by drug traffickers is a serious problem, and one that is difficult for local law enforcement officials to deal with.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment is part of the Senate-passed drug bill in the last Congress. The McNally portion of the amendment has a high priority with the Department of Justice.

So I commend the distinguished Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for submitting it at this time. This side will accept the amendment.

Mr. McCONNELL Mr. President, I join my colleague from Delaware, Senator BIDEN, in offering our bill, the Anti-Corruption Act of 1989, or "Biden-McConnell II," as an amendment to the 1989 drug bill.

Passage of this amendment will build on what we accomplished in the last Congress in the fight against election fraud and public corruption. Last year, we added an amendment to the drug bill of 1988, to close a loophole created by the Supreme Court in McNally versus U.S.

McNally held that U.S. attorneys could not use the mail fraud laws to prosecute election fraud and corruption. In doing so, it jeopardized hundreds of convictions now on the books, and brought further investigations to a halt. A number of us worked together for over a year—on a bipartisan basis—to close the McNally loophole.

However, the long road toward effective anticorruption legislation began back in 1987, when I introduced the Election Fraud Prevention Act. This bill would punish election fraud offenses as Federal felonies; expand the power of the Federal Government to investigate fraud and corruption; and allow Federal law enforcement officials to supervise local elections.

Let me take a moment to discuss how this bill came about, as a way of explaining why this bill is so vitally important. Just about 2 years ago today, the Louisville Courier-Journal did an extensive study of election fraud in Kentucky, finding votebuying, intimidation at the polls, contributions-for-contracts deals, and multiple voting practices. This report also found that many of these offenses were committed with the assistance of those officials who were supposed to keep the process clean.

Since that exposé, new cases of vote fraud have been rolling in at an alarming rate. One woman was found to have voted three times; and although she cast a vote for her dead husband, she never even bothered to vote in her own name. In a roundup of corrupt officials, a local grand jury handed down indictments of three election officers and three vote-buyers on 53 counts of election fraud.

Many of the more recent vote offenses were committed after Kentucky enacted the most sweeping antielection fraud measures in its history—indicating the degree of public cynicism about local law enforcement efforts against these kinds of abuses.

In fact, the law enforcement record against such cases in our State has been shameful. The fact is that many of the worst offenders are the local officials themselves, or the neighbors down the street; and no one sitting on any local jury is going to send these people to jail.

That is why I have said the only way to clean up election fraud is to have the Federal Government come in, allow it to supervise elections with Federal officers, and give it authority to prosecute offenders under Federal law, in Federal court. That is what Congress did in 1965, in enacting the Voting Rights Act. It used the Federal Government's power to protect people's voting rights from entrenched local discrimination.

That is what I sought to do when I introduced the Election Fraud Prevention Act in 1987. Since I introduced that bill, I found that the efforts of law enforcement against corruption are not limited to election fraud. Moreover, I learned that the Federal Government's entire anticorruption enforcement effort had been placed at risk by the McNally decision.

At that point I joined forces with the U.S. Department of Justice to develop a comprehensive answer to the McNally problem. When we had put together a bill that addressed both problems, I forged a coalition with members of the Senate Judiciary Committee who shared my view that Federal prosecutors ought to have every available resource to stop corruption.

Fortunately, our hard work paid off. On November 18, 1988, President Reagan signed the omnibus drug bill into law with the critical part of our anticorruption provision included. Federal prosecutors are back in line to fight election fraud and public corruption.

But when Senator BIDEN and I returned after the end of the 100th Congress, we felt there still was further to go. Despite our work in Congress, there still were reports of election fraud in the last election in Kentucky. And those who abuse the public trust and seek to defraud the Government are getting cleverer in evading the law. The bill we introduced at the start of the 101st Congress, and which we are adding to the drug bill today, will give us the other 20 percent we wanted but didn't get last year.

Even in this day and age, and with all our work last year, it still is not clear in the law whether the Federal Government can investigate and prosecute all acts of election fraud. This legislation will take every act of election fraud—at every level of government—a Federal offense. It raises the maximum penalty for both election fraud and public corruption to 10 years in the Federal penitentiary and a $10,000 fine. And this bill will greatly expand the jurisdictional basis for Federal prosecutors to investigate reports of fraud and go after the wrongdoers.

I cannot stress enough the importance of this legislation. In some parts of this country, if you buy or sell votes and somehow get caught, you go see your friend the judge and he gives you a wink and a slap on the wrists. If our amendment passes, and I am sure it will, then anyone who gets caught in "election-day shenanigans" will be facing a Federal grand jury and a ticket to Federal prison.

I firmly believe that if we are going to make Kentucky and the rest of this Nation a better place for our children, first we need to take care of the basics. Two of those basics are a clean election process and a government that is free of corruption. The Biden-McConnell amendment to the 1989 drug bill goes a long, long way toward accomplishing those basic, urgently needed goals.

I thank my friend, the Senator from Delaware, for his strong interest in this legislation over the last year and a half, and I commend him for his excellent work on the drug bill.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment (No. 926) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 927

(Purpose: To make clear the penalties for and to facilitate the detection of the use of the mails to send controlled substances)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have an amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the Biden amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the Biden amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the distinguished manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 927.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following new section:

SEC. . USE OF THE MAILS TO SEND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES.

(a) AMENDMENT OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE.—Section 1716 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in subsection (a) by inserting "all controlled substances (as that term is defined in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6))," immediately following "reptiles,"; and

(B) in the second undesignated paragraph of subsection (h) by striking the period at the end thereof and inserting ", or if the nonmailable matter was a controlled substance (as that term is defined in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)), shall be fined not more than $60,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both, or in the case of a second or subsequent violation in which the nonmailable matter was a controlled substance, shall be fined not more than $90,000 or imprisoned not more than 15 years, or both.".

(b) AMENDMENT OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT.—Section 403(c) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 843(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking "$30,000, or both" and inserting "$30,000, or both, or if the communication facility used was the mail, a term of imprisonment of not more than 10 years, a fine of not more than $60,000, or both"; and

(2) by striking "$60,000, or both" and inserting "$60,000, or both, or if the communication facility used was the mail, a term of imprisonment of not more than 15 years, a fine of not more than $90,000, or both".

(c) INCREASED COOPERATION WITH FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL AUTHORITIES.—The United States Postal Service shall assist to the fullest extent possible Federal, State, and local authorities in the implementation of this Act and any other Act dealing with controlled substances.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with others in these efforts to combat illegal drugs. The amendment I offer attacks one important aspect of the drug problem, that is, the use of our public mail system in the drug trade. This amendment would substantially increase the criminal penalties for distributing controlled substances through the mail. It would also direct the Post Office to cooperate to the fullest extent possible with drug interdictions, especially the Office of National Drug Control Policy to reduce the use of the mail system in this drug trade.

On a recent trip home, I spoke with over 30 officials who have responsibilities for drug interdiction, treatment, and prevention programs in Alaska. They are very worried. The drug problem in Alaska continues to fester and is spreading throughout our rural areas.

One way to get drugs into the rural areas of Alaska and throughout the country is through the use of mail. My State is one-fifth the size of the total land area of the United States. Fully 75 percent of all the community post offices in Alaska can be reached only by air or water. In these areas, the primary means of shipping goods is through the U.S. parcel post. In the absence of rural transportation, increased drug use has meant increased drug shipments through the mail.

Currently, under one statute, shipping drugs through the mail can be punished by no more than 1 year in jail and a $1,000 fine. Under another law, the punishment is no more than 4 years in jail and a $3,000 fine. My amendment would increase the penalties to no more then 10 years in jail and $60,000 in fines. For a second offense, the new penalty would be up to 15 years and $90,000 in fines.

In Alaska, private parcel carriers now permit law enforcement agencies to use narcotics or "sniffer" dogs to detect drug shipments. President Bush's national drug control strategy pledges administration efforts to "expand the use of sniffer dogs" at U.S. ports of entry. The technique is an accurate, efficient way to search for drugs.

The amendment would direct the U.S. Postal Service to cooperate completely with law enforcement authorities to stop drug mail shipments. This would include the use of narcotics dogs.

Constitutionally, this use of dog sniffing detection is sound. Since dogs respond or alert to odors that are already in the public domain, no intrusion into sealed packages occurs. Thus, probable cause is not needed to permit dog sniffing.

If a dog reacts to drug odors in a package, probable cause may be established to justify a search warrant for a more complete inspection. This amendment would not negate the need for search warrants.

The amendment would also ensure additional tracking of suspicious mailings—also constitutionally permissible. Such tracking consists of looking at the origin and destination written on the outside of parcels for patterns of suspicious shipments.

It is the responsibility of the Post Office to increase the interception of illegal drug mail shipments and reduce the use of the mail for other drug trade activities. This amendment will ensure the Post Office works with all law enforcement authorities, starting with the Office of National Drug Control Policy right down to local law enforcement agencies, to stop illegal drug mail.

Mr. President, nothing in this amendment would infringe upon the traditional privacy rights afforded Americans and their sealed mail under Federal statutes and the Constitution. The amendment would, however, ensure a more certain justice and a heavier price for those that use the national mail system to further the drug trade.

I urge its adoption.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I compliment the Senator from Alaska. It is almost silly that he has to submit the amendment. That is a worthwhile amendment, but when you think about it, the idea that we have to be on the Senate floor doing this is too bad. I thank the Senator for his vigilance, and I think the amendment is very worthwhile, and this side is happy to accept it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I also compliment the distinguished Senator from Alaska, and this side will accept the amendment, also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am very serious about this. There is no way these drugs could be getting throughout Alaska with the sniffer dogs. I was astounded to find that the Postal Service stopped the use. I am grateful, and I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

The amendment (No. 927) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Biden amendment, which is the pending business, be set aside for consideration of the Simpson amendment, which is about to be sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 928

(Purpose: To instruct the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to waive certain provisions relating to ADAMHA block grants)

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming, [Mr. SIMPSON] for himself and Mr. WALLOP, proposes an amendment numbered 928.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following new section:

SEC. . ADAMHA IV DRUG ABUSE WAIVER.

(a) INTRAVENOUS DRUG USERS.—Section 1916(c)(7) of the Public Health Services Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-4(a)(7) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Secretary shall waive the provisions of the preceding sentence for any State which has submitted application for such a waiver to the Secretary prior to September 30, 1989."

(i) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Section (a) shall be effective for fiscal year 1989 and subsequent fiscal years.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, this is in relation to the determinations for set-asides under the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health block grants are insensitive to the needs of low-population rural States.

They violate the whole philosophy of block grants; they constrain the State's ability to be responsive to the problems it identifies in the areas of drug and substance abuse and treatment.

Under ADAMHA, the State must dedicate 35 percent of its allocation to drug abuse treatment—the rest is mental health money. Of that 35 percent, the State must devote 50 percent to treatment of IV drug users. A discretionary waiver currently allows the Secretary to waive the set-aside requirements for States that can demonstrate insufficient demand for IV drug abuse treatment services. Seven States have applied for the waiver, but none has been granted. HHS says it is unclear about congressional intent.

Wyoming is among those States that cannot make efficient use of the IV drug abuse set-aside. We would have to engage in outreach and solicit these people into the State to use that money. We do have an astronomic incidence of alcoholism and related disorders, however. The ADAMHA set-aside funds would be better spent staffing an additional alcohol counseling position at one of the county clinics, where people now must now wait 6 to 10 weeks between visits.

When we are talking about amounts as small as those Wyoming and some other States receive, the set-asides and their administrative requirements become extraordinarily inefficient devices for reaching the groups Congress wants to help. The 50 percent of 35 percent works out to roughly $165,000 out of an $830,000 substance abuse allocation in Wyoming. That is $165,000 on a statewide basis that must be identifiably dedicated to IV drug abuse treatment. How can the one clinician in all of Bighorn County satisfy this requirement? Mr. President, providers and counselors can either see and treat people, or they can spend their time separating out the money according to set-aside requirements and conforming their practices to Washington's dictums.

Certainly the Federal Government should play a leadership role in targeting substance abuse funds, but I strongly object to substituting Federal directing for local understanding of the problem. I cannot believe for a minute that the authors of ADAMHA ever intended such anamolous results as these set-asides produce. They are counterproductive by every measure. Small States just do not have the manpower to split hairs on the allocation of funds. They want to treat people.

My amendment would simply instruct the Secretary to grant waivers to those States that have applied for them. This mandatory waiver would remain in effect, without the necessity of reapplying, for this and subsequent fiscal years. The waiver is also made retroactive to fiscal year 1989. As I mentioned, Wyoming and six other States applied for the waiver this year. On September 25, these States received word that the Federal agency was deferring its decision on waivers because it did not understand congressional intent. The law, however, also requires funds to be obligated in the fiscal year in which they are appropriated, meaning that the State would have to distribute its funds by September 30, whether or not it had heard from the agency. My amendment clarifies congressional intent that States which have documented that they cannot make efficient use of ADAMHA funds earmarked exclusively for IV drug abuse treatment will not be subject to the set-aside mandate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HATCH. I would like to be added as a cosponsor to the Simpson amendment.

Mr. SIMPSON. I appreciate the offer of the Senator.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think it is a good amendment. We are happy to accept it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I strongly support Senator SIMPSON's amendment. This would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to approve the waiver submitted by seven States regarding the use of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Services block grants, for IV drug abuse. It was clear that Congress intended the Secretary to approve such waivers in those States that do not need additional drug abuse treatment slots. I think the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has done us a similar service in bringing this amendment to the floor, and we will accept it on this side, as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment (No. 928) was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank the Senators very much.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to set aside the Biden amendment, to proceed with the Hatch amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 929

Mr. HATCH. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 929.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, insert the following:

SINGLE USE SYRINGES AND NEEDLES

SEC. . Within one year of enactment, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to Congress on the cost, feasibility, and effectiveness in reducing intravenous drug abuse and the spread of diseases such as AIDS which would result from eliminating syringes and needles which are capable of being used more than once and replacing them with syringes and needles which are only capable of being used a single time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, while abuse of any drug or alcohol is a problem for this country, most health experts believe that intravenous or IV drugs are especially dangerous. They are especially dangerous because IV drugs tend to be more addictive than drugs which are taken by mouth. And, they are especially dangerous because of the risk of AIDS, hepatitis, and other diseases which are associated with their use.

We have taken, and are continuing to take, a number of actions in an attempt to reduce the use of IV drugs in this country. We are expanding our efforts to reduce the supply of these drugs. We are expanding our public education efforts to deter would be users. And, we are expanding our efforts to treat current addicts. With this amendment, I am proposing that we look at one additional tool to reduce the uses of these drugs—single use syringes and needles.

To use an IV drug, an addict must not only obtain the drug, but the addict must also obtain a needle and syringe to inject the drug. These syringes are frequently reused and shared, a fact which results in the spread of diseases such as AIDS. Currently, most of the syringes used in this country, while certified for single use only, are capable of being used multiple times and that is exactly what IV drug addicts do.

Mr. President, it seems reasonable to evaluate whether or not there is adequate justification to continue to use those syringes which are capable of multiple use. It is my understanding that the Food and Drug Administration, which approves all syringes used in this country, has already approved a number of single use syringes. Therefore, syringes which are only capable of single use are currently available.

What this amendment does is ask the Secretary of Health and Human Services to look at whether the widespread use of single use syringes would have an effect in reducing IV drug abuse and the spread of diseases such as AIDS. Specifically, the Secretary is to evaluate the cost, feasibility, and effectiveness of changing over to single use syringes. If single use syringes would significantly reduce the prevalence of IV drug abuse or the spread of diseases such as AIDS, we as policymakers need to know that.

I do not know if the Secretary will find that single use syringes should be a part of our national effort to combat IV drug abuse and AIDS, but we can't afford to overlook any alternative which might help in this battle. We need the experts to look at that tool and give us their recommendations. That is all this amendment would do, and I urge my colleagues to adopt it.

I will briefly explain this amendment. This amendment provides that within 1 year of enactment, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to Congress on the cost, feasibility, and effectiveness in reducing intravenous drug abuse and the spread of diseases such as AIDS which would result from eliminating syringes and needles which are capable of being used more than once and replacing them with syringes and needles which are only capable of being used a single time.

These particular syringes, once they are used, can never be used again. They automatically break after one use. When they try to glue them together they dissolve. So this would save a lot of pain in this area. If it is feasible we can use this. I think we might be able to do a lot more to stem the tide of AIDS in this country. I think it is good amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it is a very good amendment. I compliment the Senator from Utah for offering it. He has been working in this area for so long. I am so accustomed to working with him on the Judiciary Committee that I oftentimes forget he is a ranking member of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and deals with these issues. I compliment him on it. I would like to be added as a cosponsor.

Mr. HATCH. I am happy to do that, and Senator KENNEDY should be added as cosponsor. He wanted this to be known as the Kennedy-Hatch, and now Biden amendment, or Hatch-Kennedy-Biden amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there further debate on the amendment of the Senator from Utah?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment (No. 929) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Biden amendment be laid aside for the purposes of considering an amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 930

(Purpose: To promote the development of alternative schools for youths with drug problems)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] proposes an amendment numbered 930.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . ALTERNATIVE SCHOOLS FOR YOUTHS WITH DRUG PROBLEMS.

(a) Section 5122 of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3192) is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (6);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (7) as paragraph (8); and

(C) by adding after paragraph (6) the following new paragraph:

"(7) model alternative schools for youths with drug problems that address the special needs of such students through education, treatment and counseling."

(b) Section 5125 of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3195) is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (13);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (14) as paragraph (15); and

(C) by adding after paragraph (13) the following new paragraph:

"(14) model alternative schools for youths with drug problems that address the special needs of such students through education, treatment and counseling."

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise tonight to offer an amendment that will promote the development of alternative schools for youths with drug problems. These schools can be an important element for the successful treatment of students with drug problems, as they can provide a supportive environment for the transition back into the regular educational system.

Last spring, I received a letter from Dr. William Bennett, the President's Director of National Drug Policy, requesting my ideas on how to confront the drug plague that is infecting our Nation.

After I received the letter, I convened a meeting of an ad hoc advisory group that I established last year to develop proposals for combating the drug problem in New Mexico. This group, which consists of law enforcement officers, educators, drug abuse professionals, criminal justice officials, and other leaders in the fight against drugs, put forth a number of excellent suggestions.

One of the most exciting proposals that they came up with was to develop and implement a pilot program for alternative schools for youths with drug problems.

An alternative school can provide a drug-free and supportive environment for those students who: First, have become involved with drugs; second, have recognized their problems and have demonstrated a commitment to get off drugs by becoming actively involved in a treatment program; and third, have voluntarily elected to attend the drug-free alternative school.

Adolescents experience a high recidivism rate, ranging from 60 to 90 percent, following drug-abuse treatment. They are particularly vulnerable to lapsing back into drug usage during the time when they reenter the school system. A major factor in the high recidivism rate during this critical time period is peer pressure, as the adolescent is reintroduced into the peer group and community in which he or she initially became involved with drugs. The factors which contributed to the youth's involvement with drugs remain, and he or she lapses into drug usage.

In an alternative school, the student would be surrounded by a different peer group, all of whom are in recovery and whose families are involved in the school program, and a community whose main focus is to support the student's recovery and transition back to the regular school system. The curriculum would emphasize specialized instruction that would meet educational standards and would address the special needs of students in recovery. The students would be at the school on a voluntary basis. They would be required to participate in support groups with their families and to remain drug free.

A group in Albuquerque, led by Louis Sadler of Parents Against Drugs, is working with the Albuquerque public schools to establish an alternative school for youths with drug problems.

I am happy to report that Dr. Bennett gave the suggestions of my anti-drug task force serious consideration and included the alternative schools for youths with drug problems proposal in the national drug control strategy that the President announced last month.

The President's national drug control strategy states:

School-based prevention programs should be reinforced by tough but fair school policies on use, possession, and distribution of drugs. Avoiding such policies sends our young people a decidedly mixed signal. We cannot teach them that drugs are wrong and harmful if we fail to follow up our teaching with real consequences for those who use them. Too many school systems still lack the kind of policies implemented in Anne Arundel County, Maryland, where the nunber of school drug offenses has declined by more than 80 percent since 1980.

Anne Arundel's drug policy is simple and straightforward. Any student caught selling or distributing drugs is immediately expelled. When a student is caught using or possessing drugs, the school notifies the police, calls his parents, and suspends him for one to five school days. In order to return to school, the student must participate in counseling and agree to participate in the district's after-school drug program. Students caught using or possessing drugs a second time are expelled.

Policies like these have been criticized for adding to the dropout problems. But experience shows that the firm policies fairly enforced actually reduce the number of students who must be expelled for drug violations; most students choose to alter their behavior rather than risk expulsion. Concerns about dropouts can be further addressed by establishing alternative schools and educational programs for students who are suspended or expelled. In Anne Arundel County, for example, over 90 percent of students suspended or expelled eventually return to school under close supervision. At Flowing Wells High School in Tucson, Arizona, students with drug problems can attend either of two alternative. programs. A Reentry Program is intended primarily to help dropouts resume their education. Inscape is an off-campus program that offers counseling and other personalized assistance. Both programs have been highly successful with drug-involved problem students.

One of the President's priorities for education, community action, and the workplace, therefore, is the development of model alternative schools for youths with drug problems.

Mr. President, the amendment that I am offering today amends two grant programs of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 that provide funds to local governments and other public and private nonprofit groups. It will allow local governments and other groups to use general State grant and high-risk youth grant funds to develop and implement programs for "model alternative schools for youths with drug problems that address the special needs of such students through education, treatment, and counseling."

By providing the authority to use drug-free school funds to develop alternative schools for youths with drug problems, we will be promoting the development of this exciting concept. It will allow students who are confronting their drug problem to complete their recovery in a drug-free environment and make a smooth transition back into the regular educational system.

Mr. President, essentially this war on drugs, in particular as it applies to our teenagers, is going to require some innovative approaches to providing some positive peer pressure for our young people.

In the city of Albuquerque an exciting concept in another area of need is using the institutions of the public school system to solve a social problem has achieved national acclaim. We have a school there called New Futures. The public school system runs it, but essentially it is a school that has been developed to assist pregnant teenagers finish high school and provide them with all of the support that they need, including vocational education, training in child care, and day care facilites.

So in that same city a similar innovative idea has arisen regarding teenagers who are of public school age but have been addicted or who are trying to get off of drugs and are having a great deal of difficulty doing that.

The idea that has arisen in the city of Albuquerque is that the public schools once again will be given an opportunity to use their institutional strength to create an alternative school for youths with drug problems. What that means is that they would use the normal apparatus of the public school system but would be given an opportunity to create within that school system an alternative school for those young people who have been involved with drugs.

This would be controversial in some jurisdictions, and they might not want to try it. But it seems to some experts that is is worth trying.

What we would be saying to these young people is: "We want you to continue school. Do you want to elect to go to a drug-free school wherein you will be among young people who have had drug problems? Collectively and altogether you will make rather extraordinary commitments to try to help yourselves stay off drugs. The entire curriculum will get you your academic training, but in the meantime there will be some very stringent requirements imposed on you as part of that student body."

I think it is an idea that deserves consideration. I believe the drug czar has accepted it as a good proposal and the Department of Education thinks there might be discretionary funding to try one or two of these in the United States.

I very much would like to make sure that in the future it is cleared up and made absolutely certain that these kinds of demonstration alternative schools for youths with drug problems are going to be permitted. In this way we can use the public school system in a very innovative way to help those young people who are suffering from drug involvement find a better and more tangible, and perhaps more permanent, way to rid themselves of this scourge.

I understand the manager on the majority side, Senator BIDEN, and on the minority side, Senator HATCH, are willing to accept this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it is a good amendment. I compliment the Senator on it. I could and would speak to it but in the interest of time he said it all very well. I propose we support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, we approve the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment (No. 930) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the Biden amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 931

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] proposes an amendment numbered 931.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise to offer the Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1989 as an amendment. On January 25, 1989, I along with Senator BIDEN and Senator GRASSLEY, introduced S. 84, the Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1989. Since then Senators LAUTENBERG, D'AMATO, COCHRAN, HELMS, WILSON, MCCAIN, PRESSLER, BRADLEY, LIEBERMAN, HATCH, and MIKULSKI have been added as cosponsors.

This legislation will enhance the remedies available to the United States for collection of debt owed to the Federal Government. Incredibly, it has been estimated by the General Accounting Office that the Federal Government has approximately $32 billion of outstanding, nontax, delinquent debt which is collectible.

Currently, the debts owed to the United States must be collected under the laws of the particular State where the debtor resides. Those laws vary greatly from State to State, making enforcement of debt collection extremely difficult and cumbersome.

For example, in some States a debtor can exempt vast amounts of property from execution, whereas a similarly situated debtor in another State is granted no such exemption at all. It is unfair that Federal debtors who reside in States with strong collection laws are made to pay their debts while others use weak collection laws in debtors haven States to escape repayment of their debt.

In summary, this amendment will correct the inequities that exist under the current system. This bill creates a firm, but fair, comprehensive statutory scheme for the collection of Federal debt. This legislation maintains State law, leaving State remedies unaffected in cases where the Federal Government is not a party. This legislation will be used by Federal litigators in Federal courts to collect debts owed to the Federal Government.

Regarding the history of this act, a nearly identical bill was introduced in the 100th Congress. The Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously agreed to report the bill out of committee on October 5, 1988. On October 14, 1988, the U.S. Senate unanimously passed the Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1988.

Finally, the Federal Debt Collection Procedures Act of 1989 represents a collaborative effort of the 93 U.S. attorneys across the country who perform the vast majority of debt collection litigation on behalf of the Federal Government. Such legislation reflects their broad legal expertise and practical experience. We must not ignore their collective wisdom.

Since introduction in the 101st Congress, some technical and conforming changes have been made which improve the bill. The result was an amendment in the nature of a substitute which the Subcommittee on Courts and Administrative Practice reported on July 12, 1989.

This proposal is most important and I urge its prompt passage.

Again, I wish to say this amendment was prepared by the U.S. attorneys. They all got together and prepared this bill and they felt it was the best way to collect the debts owed to the Federal Government. I do not see why anyone would oppose this. It has just been delayed in the committee this year. As I stated we passed it last year in the Senate but it did not get to the House of Representatives in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I reiterate the last point the Senator made.

The point I want to reiterate is that Senator THURMOND and I introduced this last year. It passed last year. I know of no reasonable objection to this amendment and I ask that it be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 931.

The amendment (No. 931) was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send to the desk two amendments and ask that they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the pending amendment will be set aside.

The clerk will report the amendments en bloc.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] for himself and Mr. HATCH, proposes amendments numbered 932 and 933 en bloc.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I offer these amendments on behalf of myself, the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] and others. I understand they have been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

I will make a brief statement in terms of the explanation of the amendments and then hopefully the Senate will accept them.

Mr. President, there is no problem that is of more concern to the American people than drug abuse. And with good reason. The drug epidemic is turning neighborhoods across the country into war zones. Forty percent of all high school seniors have used an illegal drug in the past year. An estimated 375,000 babies are born every year to women who have abused drugs during their pregnancies, and the evidence is mounting that many of these children may face life-long disabilities. Child protective services throughout the country are sinking under a tidal wave of drug abuse, child abuse, and neglect.

The news about the drug war—bad as it is—is not all bad. Casual use of drugs has dropped almost 40 percent in just 3 years. The evidence is strong and growing that prevention/education efforts have been working and can work better if more schools and communities can be helped to adopt the best model programs. Between 1986 and 1987, cocaine use among high school seniors dropped 19 percent. Between 1987 and 1988, it dropped another 23 percent. This dramatic drop in use was the direct result of growing understanding that even occasional use of cocaine is dangerous. Well-constructed demonstration programs have shown even greater success. Young students enrolled in the Seattle social development project reduced their use of the gateway drugs of cigarettes, alcohol, and marijuana by one-third compared to students not in the program. Among older students who went through the Kansas City Comprehensive School and Community Based Prevention Progam, use of marijuana and cocaine was less than half as high as among those not in the program.

The news about the effectiveness of treatment programs is also good. The DARE study of 24,000 drug abusers who entered treatment in the late sixties and early seventies showed that treatment sharply reduced drug use and crime and increased employment—even when users were studied 12 years after the initial treatment episode. The just-released TOPS study of 10,000 abusers entering treatment in the early eighties found similar positive results.

But despite the proven effectiveness of prevention and treatment, current resources are woefully inadequate. Thanks to the efforts of Senator BYRD last week, the Nation is moving much closer to an adequate resource commitment to the war on drugs. Last week, we also passed key elements of the President's proposals for legislative changes necessary to implement the war on drugs. But just as the resources the President proposed were woefully inadequate, the legislative changes he advocated also need substantial improvement. Because of the parliamentary situation last week, we were barred from offering more than a few of these improvements.

I intend to offer three amendments embodying these improvements. The first two amendments have been worked out with Senator HATCH; they include changes to the prevention, treatment, and education sections of the President's program representing the ideas of Senators from both sides of the aisle.

The third amendment includes items on which no agreement could be reached, but which I regard as essential to successful prosecution of the war on drugs. I will offer this amendment later in the day.

The first consensus amendment deals with prevention and treatment. It includes the three authorization changes agreed to last week: new programs for pregnant women and their infants, for training of drug treatment professionals, and for services to abused and neglected children. These amendments are included in case they do not survive the appropriations conference.

In addition, a number of important additional improvements to the President's program are included. Senator DODD has authored a program to provide additional health services to children in areas impacted by the drug amendment. Senators BAUCUS and PRYOR have provided valuable proposals to deal with the impact of this epidemic in rural areas. Their proposals would provide demonstration prevention and treatment grants in rural areas and expand the current OSAP clearing house to include a focus on rural areas. Senator DURENBERGER has included a valuable proposal to provide assistance to congressional staff suffering from substance abuse problems. Senator BIDEN has offered proposals to expand ADMS block grant services to cover the families of substance abusers and to authorize a National Academy of Sciences proposal to study the whole area of drug abuse treatment. I believe that each of these proposals can and will make an important difference in the success of our war on drugs.

The education amendment also improves the President's proposals in important respects. I offer it on behalf of myself and Senators ADAMS, MATSUNAGA, and DURENBERGER. This amendment has been agreed to by Senators HATCH, PELL, and KASSEBAUM. It addresses the education and prevention components of the drug package which affect the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act.

All school districts in the country today receive some funds under the Drug Free Schools Act. In most cases, these are enhanced by funds from State and local sources. A growing body of evidence, provided by the Kansas City midwestern prevention project and the Seattle social development project has demonstrated what programs are most effective in preventing drug abuse. These successful programs include several components:

They stress prevention in the fourth through ninth grade—the years when young people are most vulnerable to becoming involved with drugs;

They focus on preventing use of the so-called "gateway drugs": alcohol, tobacco, and marijuana; we know that if we can prevent onset of use of these gateway drugs, we can substantially reduce later use of harder substances, since less than 1 percent of the hard drug using population began using hard drugs without first using gateway drugs.

They teach "refusal" or "resistance" skills through peer counseling and other techniques so that young people can avoid peer pressure to use drugs; and

They include a community-based component with the school-based program, and involve parents, government officials, and the media.

Our amendment would ask school districts to assure that they are providing programs for these grades four through nine which focus on gateway drug prevention and which include as many of these components as possible. If a school district is not providing services to this age group, then we would require it to spend new funds available under the Drug Free Schools Program on these grades. We believe this is a necessary targeting of funds under the Drug Free School Act for those districts which are not now providing services to these late-elementary and middle school years. We have a more advanced state of knowledge about what is effective than we did when the Drug Free Schools Act was first authorized in 1986. This change will help to assure that students are being reached when they are most vulnerable to beginning drug use, and will use the most effective techniques currently available.

We have included the Urban and Rural Emergency Grant proposal by the administration. This would target funds where there is a particularly intense drug problem. This provision has been reported out of the Labor Committee as part of S. 695.

This amendment puts the legislative language in place to assure effective use of drug-free schools funds. I urge its prompt passage.

I hope that both of these amendments will be accepted en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, just to clarify a couple of matters so that we are sure, as I understand it, earlier in the day we had some amendments to which the distinguished Senator from Texas had some objections or some questions. As I understand it, they have been taken out of the amendment; is that correct?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct.

I must say, I wish it was not necessary to take them out. Quite frankly, I am only taking them out because the Senator from Texas is not here to debate them this evening and we wanted to move this legislation forward. I hope to have an opportunity to address them at another time.

We have been waiting here now for about 3½ hours for the Senator from Texas. I know he is sincere in his proposals, but there has been an effort by the leadership to move this forward and we will have a chance to debate those measures at another time.

The Senator is correct, they have been removed.

Mr. HATCH. I am going to have a clarification, if the Senator would be willing to wait and put in a quorum call. We have just reached a position where I think I am going to try to get hold of the distinguished Senator from Texas. I would just as soon have those provisions included. As you know, these are Kennedy-Hatch amendments. I do not think he would object if we were able to explain it this evening. The difficulty has been that the Senator from Texas is at the White House at a special State dinner in honor of the President of Mexico.

Mr. KENNEDY. I appreciate the position of the Senator from Utah. As always, he is very helpful. As always, he is very accommodating. I hope he will be persuasive with the Senator from Texas because I think, quite frankly, that giving maximum flexibility to local school districts is something I hear the Senator from Texas talk about frequently. I think without the provisions which we have temporarily set aside on this, the idea that we have Federal interference in those kinds of judgment in what I consider a kind of arbitrary way is not really a position of the Senate.

What is the desire of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HATCH. Let me first say, I support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts to expand certain programs under the jurisdiction of the labor and Human Resources Committee. This amendment incorporates the amendments adopted last week providing programs to help States curb child abuse by parents who use drugs.

This amendment provides expanded treatment programs for pregnant women who use drugs. This amendment provides funds for the training of substance abuse treatment professionals.

This amendment also adds important provisions by Senator DURENBERGER to ensure that rural communities have access to trained community drug prevention experts. Senator DURENBERGER also authorizes the establishment of an employee assistance program, or EAP's, for congressional employees.

This will help those employees who work on Capitol Hill have access to drug and alcohol treatment if they need it. Finally, this amendment includes a provision developed by Senator KASSEBAUM to train juvenile substance abuse treatment specialists.

So I want to particularly thank the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts for his leadership. There is no question he is a great leader in this area and there is no question that this amendment is a very good amendment.

Having said that, I would like to have just a few minutes to be able to place a call to the distinguished Senator from Texas, to see if I can reinstitute those provisions regarding education that the Senator would like to have in these amendments at this time. If I cannot, then we will proceed with this amendment and I would recommend our side adopt it and I am sure the other side will be willing to adopt it as well.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, a great deal was accomplished last week when the Senate approved a number of important initiatives that will help fight the war on drugs. I was especially pleased with the bipartisan manner in which those measures were presented, including one offered by Senator KENNEDY that would provide grants for the training of drug treatment professionals. It is no secret that one of the greatest problems facing the drug treatment community is that so many addicts are seeking treatment, and yet in many cities, so few slots are available. Moreover, many of those treatment facilities are woefully understaffed with professionals. The Kennedy measure will help increase the supply of those needed specialists.

However, I am concerned with one aspect of the training currently provided by eligible institutions for this service. Virtually all training is geared toward the treatment of adults. Little, if any, regard is given to ways of treating juveniles. Yet, juveniles have different needs, different motives for taking drugs. They take a far different approach to their surroundings, and are far more likely to respond to treatment when it is offered in a manner more suitable to their special needs. I have included in the current Labor-HHS committee package an amendment to the Kennedy measure providing an additional grant to train and recruit drug treatment professionals in the treatment of juveniles. Special emphasis would be given to the recruitment of minorities.

Mr. President, our young people are the most vulnerable casualties in this war on drugs. We must do what we can to assist them when they seek aid, to be their sounding board when they cry out for help. It is my hope this amendment will be a first step in increasing the number of trained professionals who can hear that cry and help return these young people to healthy, drug-free lives.

Mr. KOHL. I would like to engage in a colloquy with my colleague from Massachusetts, the distinguished chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee. I understand that the package we are considering today contains the same provisions we enacted last week including model projects for pregnant and postpartum women, the National Resource Center on Perinatal Addiction and Emergency Child Protective Service grants. As the author of those provisions along with Senators SIMON and DODD, I commend the distinguished Chair for including them. As he knows, the problems these programs are designed to address have reached crisis proportions.

Mr. KENNEDY. I agree with my colleague from Wisconsin. As many as 375,000 infants a year may be exposed to illegal drugs as a result of maternal substance abuse. And parental substance abuse leaves hundreds and thousands of older children at risk of abuse and neglect. I commend my colleague from Wisconsin for his leadership on these issues and all his assistance in drafting the language. I look forward to continuing to work with him on these pressing problems.

Mr. HATCH. With the Senator's permission, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I think I know the answer but will the Chair state the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is amendments 932 and 933 en bloc.

Mr. HELMS. I am sorry. Would the Chair repeat that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question before the Senate is on amendments 932 and 933, en bloc, offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HELMS. I see. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. KENNEDY. Objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The pending business before the Senate is amendments 932 and 933 offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida regrets he was not aware there was an amendment currently pending before the Senate. I will offer this at an appropriate time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair notes that absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this responds to the concerns of the Senator from Texas that will permit an amendment to the legislation or proposal that was made last week by the Senator from Texas in terms of the enforcement provisions.

What it basically says is that if a local school district is working to conform to the drug-free school plan that there will be flexibility given to the Secretary of Education for up to 1 year to permit that school district to enact its drug-free school plan. It seems to still maintain the strong admonition that these schools are going to have to comply, but it does provide greater flexibility to local school districts in reaching their requirements.

I understand it is acceptable to the Senator from Utah.

I hope both these amendments now will be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? The question is on agreeing to amendment 932 and amendment 933, as modified.

The amendments (Nos. 932 and 933, as modified) were agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Block Grant is the key Federal source of drug treatment funds. The centerpiece of the President's proposals in the area of treatment were what the Bennett report describes as "greater State, local, and individual treatment program accountability for effectiveness." The President's program attempts to achieve this objective by requiring States to submit a State drug abuse plan and include certain key areas—such as training, coordination, referral to social services, targeting on areas of highest need, and so on in the plan. But the President's program is fundamentally flawed in several vital respects. First, it does not include key elements that all the experts we have consulted believe should be in the State plan. Second, it neither assures that the State plan will respond to the needs the President has identified adequately nor protects the States against arbitrary and capricious Federal denials of funding.

My amendment incorporates all the recommendations of the President for the ADMS block grant, but it also makes significant improvements. In addition, it incorporates important recommendations of Senator BIDEN and Senator CRANSTON. Senator BIDEN's proposal will establish a new, separate authorization to assure that adequate research is conducted on new pharmaceutical agents to help make treatment for addiction effective and will protect against companies taking unfair advantage of the benefits bestowed on them by the Orphan Drug Act. Senator CRANSTON's amendment will establish a new, $60 million authorization to help communities set up comprehensive drug prevention programs. All experts agree that the most effective drug prevention occurs when there is a comprehensive community effort. This part of the amendment will help that occur.

My amendment to the block grant incorporates all the President's proposals for improving the accountability and effectiveness of State administration of ADMS block grant funds through requiring States to develop and implement comprehensive drug treatment plans. It expands the President's plan by including some additional requirements for State plans and publicly funded treatment facilities regarded as essential by drug treatment experts. In addition, it provides essential flexibility that has been requested by the States in the area of inpatient treatment and construction of new facilities.

Under my amendment, treatment facilities would be required to provide a program of aftercare for those who have left their treatment programs. Drug addiction is a chronic disease, and its victims are always in danger of relapse. Effective programs need to follow their graduates to assure that further treatment and support services can be offered as needed.

Second, the State plans would be required to include a program of stopgap assistance to help assure that addicts that request treatment and cannot be accommodated immediately are provided at least some minimal services to keep them interested in receiving treatment.

Third, the amendment requires States to include in their plans special programming targeted at women and minorities, if needed. These groups have some special needs that may render treatment ineffective if these needs are not recognized.

In addition to expanding the requirements for State plans contained in the President's plan, the proposal would allow States to provide inpatient treatment services so long as no other residential options were available and so long as the cost of inpatient care was no higher than 125 percent of the amount that would be paid for residential care. All over the country, the State treatment efforts are hindered by a lack of residential treatment beds—even though these beds are essential for treatment of some groups, including pregnant drug abusers. At the same time, there are empty beds in hospital treatment programs. This amendment would change the current prohibition on paying for inpatient treatment for the block grant, so long as the payment was not excessive.

The 1988 drug bill recognized that a critical shortage of treatment facilities was hampering drug treatment efforts. For the first time, States were allowed to build new treatment facilities if a waiver were obtained and there was no other way of doing the job. The use of block grant funds was conditioned, however, on a dollar-for-dollar State match. This has proved too big a barrier in some States, and this amendment will allow this matching requirement to be relaxed on a waiver basis.

In addition to providing a more comprehensive approach to drug treatment needs than the President's program, this amendment provides greater accountability and fairness for States and for treatment programs than the first degree amendment. It provides greater accountability because it requires States and treatment programs to meet minimum standards established in regulation, as opposed to generalized requirement for description of plan elements in the administration plan. It provides greater fairness because it permits the Secretary of HHS to disapprove a State plan only if it fails to meet minimum requirements established in regulation. By contrast, the administration plan gives the Secretary total discretion to approve or disapprove a State plan.

I believe that accountability means standards and fairness means freedom for arbitrary actions. The administration plan provides neither; this amendment provides both.

Mr. President, I would have liked to work out this proposal with the administration. I believe that with a constructive discussion, we could have reached agreement. But when we sat down with representatives of the administration, we were informed that they were not willing to change a single comma of their plan. I am sorry that they have taken this attitude. I would rather be offering an amendment today that every one could agree to. But the White House's refusal to negotiate does not relieve this body of the obligation to improve this plan where it needs improvement.

I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Let me point out to the distinguished Senator this is an amendment that probably will require a rollcall vote. I would like to speak—not very long—on why I think it will require a rollcall vote.

Mr. KENNEDY. Sure.

Mr. HATCH. What we are trying to do this evening is to take care of all the amendments we can accept and then accumulate the rollcall amendments and get a time agreement so we can finish the debate on those tomorrow. I would like to ask the Senator if he would defer on this amendment until tomorrow.

Mr. KENNEDY. Fine.

Mr. HATCH. We will put this into the unanimous-consent agreement and we will have a rollcall vote at the appropriate time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will be glad to. I was unaware that there was that particular procedure being put into place.

Mr. HATCH. It is our fault.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would be willing to enter into a time agreement on that and one other amendment, if that is the desire of the floor managers of this legislation. Can I be assured, therefore, that on this matter and one other matter, both of which I would be more than welcome to try to work out with the Senator from Utah—quite frankly, if that is the challenge, I think we could work it out very quickly.

Mr. HATCH. Let us see if we can work it out.

Mr. KENNEDY. I want to have the assurances that we will have an opportunity to address both of these measures before final passage. I am glad to either address them now or at a time when the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Delaware so desire.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. If we could do it that way, I think most Senators would like to see us wrap up all of the acceptable amendments tonight without rollcall votes. I hope we can do that, and I hope we will not have any rollcall votes.

The majority leader has asked us to see if we can arrive at a unanimous-consent agreement with regard to those matters where there is likely to be a rollcall vote.

With that, I ask the distinguished Senator to maybe withhold his amendment until we can debate it tomorrow and it will give us time to see if we can agree on it. I do not know that we will be able to agree on any national standards amendment, but there are other amendments we are looking at to see if we can agree.

Mr. KENNEDY. I indicate to my good friend, I more than welcome the opportunity to comply with the request of the Senator, if that is the desire of the floor managers. I think I was told earlier by the Senator from Delaware—I now see the majority leader on the floor. I am prepared to vote on that measure this evening or tomorrow or at whatever time the Senate desires.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, what is the business before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 934.

AMENDMENT NO. 924

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that amendment be temporarily laid aside for us to move back to the Biden amendment on crack houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will not take any time to further discuss the amendment. I mentioned it earlier. The amendment provides for civil enforcement authority that gives the Attorney General the power to go to court to seek eviction and the imposition of a fine on the owner and operator of such facilities. It facilitates the ability to close these crack houses down while proceeding criminally as well.

I understand it has been cleared by my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle. It is quite frankly just another tool we are giving law enforcement to be able to move civilly and rapidly—by civilly, I mean civil procedures—to shut these houses down. It is an authority they want. I think it will be helpful. I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 935 TO AMENDMENT NO. 924

(Purpose: To provide for authority for the President to use the Armed Forces of the United States to secure the removal of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama)

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina, Senator HELMS.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 935 to amendment No. 924.

At the end of the pending amendment, add the following:

"SEC. . U.S. FORCES TO ASSIST IN REMOVAL OF GENERAL MANUEL ANTONIO NORIEGA.

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President is authorized to use the armed forces of the United States to secure the removal of General Manuel Antonio Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama in order to (a) bring General Noriega to trial in the United States under the terms of his February 1988 indictment on drug trafficking charges, (b) protect the Panama Canal pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaties of 1978, (c) protect the people of Panama in their struggle to rid their nation of the brutal oppression of the Noriega regime, and (d) restore a Constitutional government to Panama.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I know many Senators have followed with interest, and some of us with dismay, the events which have unfolded today in Panama. Unfortunately, at the end of the day it seems to be the same as it has been. What goes around comes around. Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega remains the dictator of Panama.

General Noriega is a criminal. He is wanted in the United States on drug trafficking charges stemming from his personal involvement in the trafficking of illicit narcotics into the United States and of money laundering the proceeds of such involvement. He is the leading drug trafficker in the Western Hemisphere. If we want this drug bill to be taken seriously, we have to do something about Noriega.

Today, Mr. President, courageous soldiers within the Panamanian defense forces attempted a coup against General Noriega. The forces appeared to have been well coordinated and effective, and came close to their objective. However, at the crucial moment during the coup attempt the United State apparently rejected overtures from the rebels to assist in their efforts to depose this present dictator.

In short, Mr. President, in Washington little, if anything, was done to seize the moment. Instead, uncertainty prevailed, no actions were taken to assist the people in Panama, and the coup attempt failed.

While the United States apparently had no role in the planning of the attempt, U.S. officials could have intervened, but they declined to do so.

I have learned from sources close to the situation that confusion existed in the U.S. Government as to the authority of U.S. forces to become involved, and indeed of the President's authority to order such involvement. In my opinion, the President's authority is already clear under the Constitution. He needs no further authority. But if there is any doubt, let's clear it up right now.

The pending amendment makes explicit that the President has the authority to use the Armed Forces of the United States to secure the removal of General Noriega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama.

The purposes for which the authority is granted are fourfold: One, to bring General Noriega to trial in the United States under the terms of his February 1988 indictments on drug trafficking charges. Two, to protect the Panama Canal pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaties of 1978. Three, to protect the people of Panama in their struggle to rid their country of the brutal oppression of the Noriega regime, and four, to restore a constitutional government to Panama.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the underlying amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that would require unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. HELMS. Which I ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the yeas and nays on the underlying amendment?

Mr. BIDEN. Reserving the right to object, and I think I will object, I would like to hear restated what the unanimous-consent request is.

Mr. HELMS. I ask unanimous consent that I may request the yeas and nays on the underlying amendment, which is the Biden amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the Senator from North Carolina retains the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I have been on the telephone most of this day talking with various people in Panama, including Americans, and with various people within the Government of the United States, most of them high ranking. I believe I have never seen such confusion and contradiction.

At about 9 o'clock Washington time, this morning, we had a golden opportunity to help the people of Panama rid themselves of a malignancy, a political dictatorial malignancy; and instead of doing something about it, the United States Government acted like a bunch of Keystone Cops running around bumping into each other. Some said, well, the President does not have this authority, or we do not know whether the President has this authority. I want the Senate of the United States to tell the President that he does have the authority. We must keep alive the hope that one of these days those courageous people in Panama may attempt again to rid themselves of General Noriega. And we must be prepared to help.

Now, Mr. President, I do not want to delay the Senate, nor do I want the underlying amendment withdrawn—which I am almost confident it will be—because that would bring down both the underlying amendment and the second-degree amendment, which I offer with regard to General Noriega. While we think about what we are going to do, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I do not intend to let the quorum call be called off.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the Senator withhold that for just a moment?

Mr. HELMS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. I wonder if the Senator from North Carolina would agree to a unanimous consent to lay his pending amendment to the Biden amendment aside while I offer an amendment on some language on the forfeiture fund as it relates to Customs and also as it relates to the other forfeiture fund in the Justice Department.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina, Senator HELMS.

Mr. HELMS. I will be glad to work with the Senator. I ask unanimous consent, one, that the pending second-degree amendment be temporarily laid aside on the condition that at the conclusion of action on the DeConcini second-degree amendment, that the Helms amendment be restored precisely as it is, that is as a second-degree amendment with the yeas and nays ordered upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent has been requested. Is there objection?

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the Senator yield? What I am suggesting to the Senator from North Carolina is that we lay aside both his amendment and the pending Biden amendment, making no change, so that I could offer my amendment to the bill, and then we would return to the same status.

Mr. HELMS. To amend the Biden amendment?

Mr. DECONCINI. No. I do not want to amend the Biden amendment.

Mr. HELMS. Conditioned upon the assurance from the Chair that the Senator from North Carolina will be recognized to restore his amendment to its posture as of now, I request that both the underlying amendment and the second-degree amendment be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the second-degree amendment and the underlying amendment are laid aside.

Mr. HELMS. I will be recognized at the conclusion, and I said that at the outset.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. What is the pending amendment, Mr. President, the amendment from the Senator from Massachusetts? Is that the pending amendment now that that has been laid aside, the second-degree amendment of the Senator from North Carolina?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Part of the unanimous-consent agreement would permit the Senator from Arizona to offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 936

(Purpose: To broaden the use of the Customs forfeiture fund to benefit State and local law enforcement agencies providing assistance in enforcement activities)

Mr. DECONCINI. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] for himself, Mr. WILSON, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. GRAMM, proposes an amendment numbered 936.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place insert:

Section 613A, subsection (a)(3)(F), of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1613b) is amended to read as follows: "payment of overtime, salaries, travel, fuel, training, equipment, and other similar costs of State and local law enforcement officers that are incurred in assisting the United States Customs Service in law enforcement activities.".

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the amendment I have sent to the desk is an amendment to expand the ability of U.S. Customs Service to share the proceeds seized as a result of drug violations where they are in coordination, cooperation, and assistance of State and local law enforcement agencies. Current law permits Customs to share the proceeds from assets seized when the State and local government participate in joint law enforcement operations with the U.S. Customs Service. The law authorizes Customs to use the deposits in the forfeiture fund to pay the cost of overtime salaries, travel, fuel, training, equipment and other costs. The amendment I am sponsoring and sent to the desk with my good friend, the Senator from New Mexico, Mr. DOMENICI, authorizes Customs to share the proceeds from assets seized when the State and local law enforcement officials "assist Customs in law enforcement activities." It also authorizes Customs to use the funds to pay overtime in salaries of State and local law enforcement officials.

Mr. President, last week when we considered the Byrd-Hatfield amendment here, the omnibus drug amendment in the transportation bill, we provided an additional $5 million to the U.S. Customs fund, so the Customs would be in a position to expand and share in the proceeds with State and local law enforcement. The amendment I am sponsoring will allow Customs to use that additional $5 million and help the State and local law enforcement agencies that are on the front line of this drug war. While there is increased violence in our cities and towns from the grip of the drugs, I believe it is imperative that Federal agencies do everything they can to make the job of State and local law enforcement easier. This amendment will do just that.

It would provide not only additional funds, but would give the State and local law incentives to assist the U.S.

Customs Service in its drug interdiction program.

I move the adoption of the amendment, Mr. President. I think it has been cleared by both the majority and ranking member and the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. It is true, the Senator from Delaware accepted the amendment, but I was asked just a moment ago by the Senator from Utah if we would withhold adoption of this amendment while he made one last check. He is off the floor at the moment, and so I ask the Chair, while we are waiting for the Senator from Utah to return, if the Biden amendment on forfeiture is still at the desk? We had set it aside by unanimous consent on about 10 occasions this evening. There were two Biden amendments, both of which were set aside by unanimous consent to proceed to the sequential amendments that we were moving on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Delaware both amendments 923 and 924 remain at the desk.

Mr. BIDEN. And I would, while we are waiting for Senator HATCH to return, suggest to my friend from North Carolina that I may wish to inquire of him whether or not he would be willing to temporarily lay aside the Biden forfeiture amendment which is at the desk without losing his position on the second amendment and recognition on the Panama Canal amendment, or to pass the forfeiture amendment that is at the desk. I am not making that request now. I am just, quite frankly, taking up time while we are waiting for my friend from Utah to return. But I would like him to consider that possibility.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I yield.

Mr. HELMS. I understand. If the Senator will make a deal with the press that they will not report that HELMS tied up the Senate all night.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I have had, as the Senator from North Carolina has observed, over the last 2 years tremendous influence on the press. They have been always taking me at my word.

Mr. HELMS. Not as much as I.

Mr. BIDEN. And also given me the benefit of the doubt.

So I am certain if I say so, the press will respond in the exact way. They will say the Senator did not tie up the Senate.

Mr. HELMS. I was speaking in jest, of course.

Mr. BIDEN. So was the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield for additional question to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HELMS. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. HELMS. Last Thursday night, I offered an amendment and was ready to vote on it. There were to be 10 minutes equally divided, and 2½ hours elapsed before anything happened, but I was ready to vote and, lo and behold, I read in the paper that I tied up the Senate until after midnight.

I want to make it clear that I was ready to vote on this amendment immediately.

When does the Senator contemplate restoring his underlying amendment and the second-degree Helms amendment, tomorrow?

Mr. BIDEN. No. I am going to have to check with other interested parties on this side, but I would be willing to restore it to its status on the floor for consideration of the vote this evening.

I might add that the Senator from North Carolina has not tied up the Senate tonight but clearly he has confounded it as he is wont to do.

I was wondering why he was sitting so long listening to the Senator from Delaware. I was so impressed and flattered that he was here for as long as he was listening to the Senator from Delaware go on and deal with 18 amendments. I thought that maybe he had recognized or thought that maybe I had some significant contribution to make on the drug issue. I should have known better.

Mr. HELMS. The Senator always fascinates me. I enjoy listening to him on any subject.

Mr. BIDEN. As the Senator from North Carolina does, he occasionally confronts me, many times defeats me and all the time interests me, and I must say that the Senator's amendment on U.S. forces to assist in the removal of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega is one that while we are waiting for the Senator from Utah I could say that the first half of which is I think very sound and speaking only for the Senator from Delaware recognizes the President's existing authority to use his authority to bring General Noriega to trial in the United States under the term of the February 1988 indictments in part B to protect the Panama Canal pursuant to the treaties. But part C protects the people of Panama in their struggle to rid their nation to bring opposition to the Noriega regime, and part D to restore constitutional government to Panama.

Although these are notions I fully support, I wonder whether or not we are giving the President authority in advance if he were to decide it was in the interest of the United States to declare war on Panama.

I do not know that it does that. At the appropriate time I would ask that. It seems to me that the President of the United States would be able to without consulting the Congress, again assuming this would pass both Houses, and I am sure he would do it for legitimate and proper reasons, literally send in an invasion force to not only clear out Noriega but to restore a constitutional government. And if that required the use of 2,000 or 10,000 or 200,000 American troops we would have an advanced authorized ability to do that.

That is not something that we should discard as unreasonable but that is certainly something that the Senator from Delaware would like to have a stronger case made by the administration at the time.

I am reluctant to give what appears to be a blank check notwithstanding the fact that the President I expect would not fill in a very large amount and would act very prudently.

But these last two sections to harken back to them, I acknowledge the overused comparison that seems to make the Tonkin Gulf resolution blush by comparison. Maybe we should do it, but it seems to me that we would be better served. And the point made by the Senator from North Carolina, the sections A and B of his amendment are much sounder and more reasonable at this time.

I do not mean this time of night. I mean this time in terms of the existing relationship with Panama and the relationship equally important between the executive and legislative branches.

So, the Senator from Delaware I believe based on what appears here, and I will get back to this amendment, I will be able to ask the Senator from North Carolina a number of questions. He is always forthright in his answer. If it reads as it appears to the Senator from Delaware I suggest it is much too broad authority.

I assume part of the reason for the amendment, notwithstanding the fact that the Senator from North Carolina has always been consistent, always been vehement in what he thinks we should allow and authorize the President to do relative to Panama, there is no inconsistency in this amendment and in the position of the Senator from North Carolina. But I assume the reason it was attached to a relatively insignificant amendment in the midst of a long, drawnout debate on drugs is as was prompted by the events that occurred today, and the Senator from Delaware must acknowledge since he is no longer on the Intelligence Committee and has been occupied on the floor the bulk of the day, I am not fully apprised of all that happened except to understand that at some point the opposition forces to Noriega maybe for as many as 4 hours or thereabouts had Mr. Noriega actually in their custody and there were thousands of U.S. troops not but a mile away because they are stationed in Panama.

Absent the ability or the willingness or the directive on the part of the President to have those troops respond if they were requested to the aid of those who had Noriega in their custody there was, as I understand it, the ability of Noriega forces to not only recapture the flag but recapture Noreiga, and so I assume that is what is prompting this.

I can understand the Senator's frustration in the failure of the administration to respond. But again I do not know that all those facts are correct. It just seems, though, that this is an unusual time in this bill to raise it.

I would ask, since we are not on the amendment, notwithstanding the fact I am talking about the amendment, if the——

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator will yield for a question.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I have an amendment I understand is acceptable by the majority. In the interest of biding a little bit of time, I would be happy to offer it at this particular time and explain it briefly and then let the resolution of the pending matter proceed while I am offering the amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. In response to the question, I have no objection to the Senator proceeding to explain the amendment, but I would be reluctant to have him attempt to propose the amendment because we are stacking—when we were kids, we used to refer to Dagwood sandwiches—we are stacking so many amendments up that it is getting very complicated. It is beginning to look like a Dagwood sandwich.

I would suggest, in the interests of time, that the Senator explain his amendment and let us talk about it so when he gets a chance to in fact introduce it we will no longer need a discussion or debate on it and we will be able to move on it.

He is correct, the Senator from Delaware is willing and anxious to accept his amendment.

So if the Senator is willing to withhold—he cannot send his amendment to the desk without unanimous consent—if he understands that, I would be delighted to hear his rationale for his amendment in the interest of time.

AMENDMENT NO. 941

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I would be happy to respond to that request to describe my amendment at this time without sending it to the desk to avoid establishing a more complicated procedure than we are already in, but I can dispense with the discussion of the amendment. I know this is a backward way of approaching it, but we will do it in this way in the interest of time, at 10:20 in the evening, so that I can avoid taking the Senate's time in the discussion later on.

Mr. President, the amendment I am proposing will encourage the States to establish boot camp programs as alternatives to imprisonment. I propose directing the Bureau of Justice assistance to provide funds for demonstration grants to the States to set up military-style boot camp programs for first-time offenders who have committed nonviolent crimes, including nonviolent drug offenses.

The President proposed that the States enact laws setting up boot camp projects in his national drug strategy. The Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy William Bennett has long advocated the use of boot camp programs by the States as an alternative to prison for certain drug-related offenses.

I strongly believe that this type of incarceration offers a more appropriate means of punishing nonviolent offenders than prison. Boot camps can promote character development and reduce recidivism. Prisons are breeding grounds for career criminals. Moreover, boot camps can be used by the States to relieve severe prison overcrowding—at a much lower cost than prison—so that prison space is available to house more violent criminals.

A dozen States—including States as diverse as New York, Mississippi, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Michigan—have already set up boot camp programs, and the idea is spreading rapidly. My own home State of Indiana has set up a task force to study the concept. Because I believe that the States should be encouraged to carry out projects such as this, I would like to see financial support for a nationwide effort to establish boot camps—possibly in abandoned military installations—which will combine military style discipline, physical training, hard labor, drill, and ceremonial exercises. I would also require boot camps to include compulsory drug treatment, where needed, job training, vocational education, and literacy education programs so that boot camp graduates will be better prepared to return to society and find gainful employment and become better citizens.

The boot camp alternative is based on the notion that young drug users, white collar and petty criminals, and other first-time nonviolent offenders who have not committed themselves to a life of crime should be given a chance to rehabilitate and reform themselves. Boot camp programs traditionally provide a short—90- to 180-day—period of imprisonment followed by a return to community supervision for young adult—male and female—recruits who have not been in prison before. It is hoped that youthful offenders will gain from the rigorous experience the values and discipline, the sense of self-worth, and the tools they need to return to society at the end of their sentences, to support their families, and to make a more positive contribution to their communities.

I realize that recent GAO and Justice Department studies on the impact of boot camps were inconclusive due to the newness of these programs. However, in recent testimony before both the Senate and House Judiciary Committees, Commissioner Thomas Coughlin of the New York State Department of Correctional Services pointed to a follow-up study of that State's boot camp programs which showed that this type of incarceration was a success, in that it relieved crowded conditions in State prisons and program graduates had returned to the community and were adjusting well under parole supervision. In fact, boot camp parolees were found to have more gains than non-boot camp parolees in the critical areas of employment, educational achievement, program participation, satisfactory, educational achievement, and the degree to which they refrained from involvement in new criminal activity.

Donald J. Hengesh, director of Michigan's Special Alterative Incarceration Program, testified that early follow-up on graduates showed "a success rate slightly above ninety percent." He was satisfied that "the program does give young inmates self-esteem and self-motivation and it pushes them to achieve at levels they never knew they had. Prison will not do that for them."

I must add that the concept of boot camp programs as an alternative to imprisonment and a method for reducing recidivism received the support of David Coolidge, senior regional director of Justice Fellowship, a nonprofit criminal justice reform organization affiliated with prison fellowship ministries, in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, the war on drugs must be waged on all levels. This is the kind of program that incorporates punishment with rehabilitation. This is the kind of program that I believe will succeed in reducing recidivism and prison overcrowding. This is the kind of program that can prove an effective weapon in our arsenal for reducing the demand for illegal drugs. This is the kind of program that the States can undertake and carry out with success, provided they receive some support and assistance from the Federal Government.

My amendment does not authorize a new program and it does not appropriate any specific amount of funds. In fiscal year 1989 the Bureau of Justice Assistance received $150 million in funding, and spent $29.7 million in discretionary grants. Of that $29.7 million, the Director awarded just $500,000 for two small boot camp projects run by the States. What I am proposing is that the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance continue to provide funding for demonstration grants to the States to allow them to start and operate boot camp projects. I simply would impose a few conditions on those grants so that the boot camp programs meet their goals and the needs of society for punishment and rehabilitation of the young offender.

Mr. President, I believe that boot camp programs have an important function as part of our overall law enforcement effort against crime and drugs and as a way to improve our criminal justice system. I hope my colleagues will enable the States to give boot camps a try.

I would just add that the following Senators have cosponsored this amendment: Senator HUMPHREY, Senator REID, Senator MURKOWSKI, Senator LOTT, Senator DURENBERGER, Senator NICKLES, Senator WALLOP, Senator D'AMATO, and Senator BURNS.

I believe the majority has looked at it and finds it acceptable. I thank the chairman for allowing me the opportunity to explain this amendment which, as I understand it, will be offered shortly. I thank the Senator for the chance to do that.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator is welcome.

Mr. President, let me see if I can understand for my own benefit where we are. When we last spoke the Senator from Arizona, who is no longer here—when we last spoke, the Senator from Arizona was here. I understood that the amendment of the Senator from Arizona is now accepted by both parties; is that correct, I ask my friend from Utah?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct. We are prepared to accept the DeConcini amendment. I do want to ask him a question or two so that we understand what may happen in conference.

Why do we not proceed with the Bingaman amendment?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we have to ask the unanimous consent of your gracious host this evening, the Senator from North Carolina.

If anyone can see if the Senator from North Carolina is in the Republican cloakroom, it would help matters, because I would not like to seek a unanimous-consent agreement in his absence.

But I will tell the Chair the agreement I will be seeking. I am going to seek an agreement—here he is.

I would like, I say to my friend, the Senator from North Carolina, in order to keep this bill moving, to seek unanimous consent that we temporarily lay aside the DeConcini amendment and move to a Bingaman amendment.

I withdraw that request. I suggest that the Senator from Utah now has an opportunity to ask the Senator from Arizona the two questions that he wished to ask him.

Mr. President, the Chair has been very gracious this evening. I want to point out I usually do not ramble as much as I am this evening, but it is troublesome to find Senators who wished to speak only moments before I turn my head.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. DECONCINI. May I ask the Chair, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is Amendment 936, offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside in order that I may offer another amendment that has been cleared now on both sides, not in any way altering the previous unanimous consent sought by the Senator from North Carolina as it relates to this subject matter and the previous pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, maintaining the previous unanimous consent order, the amendments covered by that order are temporarily laid aside and the Senator from Arizona is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 937

(Purpose: To limit the retention of seized assets for administration expenses)

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] for himself, Mr. WILSON, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. GRAMM, proposes an amendment numbered 937.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.

Section 511(e)(1) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(e)(1)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In determining the equitable share of proceeds for a State or local law enforcement agency from a drug-related asset seizure under subparagraph (A), the Attorney General shall not retain more than 20 percent of the total proceeds to cover the costs of administrative expenses."

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, this amendment deals with the Federal law enforcement agencies which are authorized to share the proceeds from drug seizures with State and local agencies that participate in the seizures.

Currently the Attorney General requires deduction of 10 percent of the proceeds of a drug seizure for Federal administrative expenditures. From time to time, the Justice Department has considered increasing this administrative surcharge.

We understand the current proposal has been considered within the Justice Department to raise this by 25 or 35 percent.

This amendment, Mr. President, sets a limit of 10 percent, as is the existing rule now. These are funds, Mr. President, that go directly to local law enforcement. This is a way that we do not have to appropriate new funds, so to speak, to go to local law enforcement. It depends on what cooperation they have with the Federal authorities. Once a case is made, once there is the confiscation of funds, then it is distributed 90/10.

I have cleared this amendment with the Senator from Utah, and I understand he is prepared to accept the amendment, and the Senator from Delaware is also prepared to accept the amendment.

Any increase to this surcharge only serves to increase the reserves of the Justice Department's asset forfeiture fund and in turn short changes the State and local law enforcement agencies that are in desperate need of resources to battle the drug lords in the local communities.

These local law enforcement agencies benefit greatly from the sharing of the ill-gotten bounty of the drug pushers. The sharing of these assets has done more to foster cooperation between the Federal and local enforcement agencies that any other single initiative. Last year, in drug hearings in Arizona, a local police chief testified that Federal assets sharing was the most important tool that he had in combating the drug trade.

While we do not want to favor one group over another, it seems to me that the resource needs of the Federal law enforcement agencies are better addressed through the appropriations process. We have given very generous attention to the Justice Department requirements in the recent drug funding amendment. As a result, I feel that we have provided adequate funding for our Federal agents.

Therefore, it is now time to focus on the needs of the local law enforcement agencies. They need an enhancement of resources not a reduction. This amendment will ensure that the State and local agencies entitlement is preserved and that the Justice Department cannot balance its books on the back of the State and local police.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand it, this is the amendment that involves the 10 percent?

Mr. DECONCINI. The Senator from Utah is correct.

Mr. HATCH. I have had the administration chat with me. They are very concerned that they may need more than 10 percent, even on the most conservative estimates.

I understand what the distinguished Senator is trying to do. He is trying to lock it into statutory form, but I have to tell the distinguished Senator, if we take this amendment and we go to conference and they can show a reasonable case that they need more than 10 percent, we may have to change that in conference.

I presume if there is a reasonable case made, the distinguished Senator will not have any major objection to that.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. DECONCINI. Let me assure the Senator from Utah I understand what happens in conferences, and I understand there may need to be, maybe, more input on this. Maybe a reasonable case can be made, but this Senator has heard a reasonable case made at 10 percent.

I appreciate what the Senator is trying to do this evening, and also realizing the prerogatives of the conference prevail once it has passed here, I will work with the Senator from Utah to find what is reasonable along the lines we have discussed this evening.

Mr. HATCH. That is all I can ask of the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

With that comment, realizing we may have to adjust this upward somewhat in conference—we may not—and I have as much interest in keeping it as low as I can as the distinguished Senator from Arizona has. So I will be working, trying to get the lowest, most conservative figure we possibly can, and yet still not interfere with what really needs to be done in this area.

With that, we will be happy to accept the amendment on this side. It is my understanding the distinguished Senator from Delaware will accept the amendnmet on his side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment (No. 937) was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 936

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment No. 936, offered by the Senator from Arizona. Is there further debate?

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the amendment No. 936 I thought had been cleared also. That is a minor amendment, Mr. President, dealing with changing the words "to assisting" in the forfeiture fund dealing with the U.S. Customs Service, so they can reimburse local governments for salaries, travel, fuel, training.

I hope the Senator from Utah will accept this. I realize conferences have to deal with this. I have cleared this with the distinguished manager, Senator BIDEN, on it.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield? We have not been able to clear this amendment on this side. I will endeavor to do so if I can. I have been informed they are trying to get it cleared, but as of right now it is not.

I wonder if I can ask the distinguished Senator to withdraw it temporarily, to withdraw it and bring it back, if we can.

Mr. DECONCINI. I am reluctant to withdraw the amendment, but I am more than happy, by unanimous consent as the Senator from North Carolina has done for me, to have this laid aside while the Senator attempts to clear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware, Mr. BIDEN.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I support the effort of the Senator from Arizona. But I am reluctant to continue to lay things aside. We now have an incredibly complex web of amendments that are at the desk, all of which have been temporarily laid aside, beginning with the amendment of the Senator from Delaware on forfeiture; Senator KENNEDY's amendment, the amendment on drug treatment; the amendment from Senator HELMS on Panama; and the amendment of the Senator from Delaware on crack houses.

I assure the Senator we will get it back up, but I am not prepared to agree to the unanimous consent.

Mr. DECONCINI. Would the distinguished chairman yield? I would be more than happy to have a vote on it, if the Senator from Utah would like to do that. We were talking about getting a vote here.

Mr. BIDEN. I would be happy to have a vote, assuming that is what my colleagues wish, assuming the Senator thinks the Senator from Utah is not going to speak for some time on his amendment.

But I am reluctant to set it aside at this moment.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the pending amendment is DeConcini amendment No. 9367.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is 936.

Mr. DECONCINI. I understand the distinguished Senator from Utah has been able to clear this amendment. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand what the Senator is trying to do. It is a reasonable approach. I want to commend him for his efforts in this area. He is one of the best in the Senate who has tried to help in this particular area. We accept this amendment.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Utah. He has been one of the leaders in this area for a long time. He has articulated in a way I have been unable to do. I want to thank the Senator from Delaware also for his amendment dealing with forfeiture, which I support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 936.

The amendment (No. 936) was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. HELMS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. HATCH. After the distinguished Senator from North Carolina is taken care of, we have two other amendments that are certainly acceptable that I am aware of at this time: One from the distinguished Senator from New Mexico that should not take long; it is a good amendment; and one from the distinguished Senator from Vermont, which is a very good amendment. I want to announce we are ready to proceed on those, and I thank my colleague.

Mr. WARNER. Will the Senator yield for a statement in reference to the manager's statement?

Mr. HELMS. Without losing my right to the floor, I am delighted to yield.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the managers, the Senator from Virginia has proposed an amendment cosponsored by the Presiding Officer. It is an amendment which the Senate adopted readily in connection with H.R. 3015. I am just hopeful that that could likewise be considered tonight.

Mr. HATCH. With the understanding, it is my understanding Senator COATS has already debated an amendment, he has urged its adoption and we can dispose of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HELMS. Providing I do not lose my right to the floor, I yield to anyone who seeks the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. I apologize, I did not hear. Did the Senator from Utah say he would accept the amendment of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WARNER. The Senator from Utah did not say that. I hope the managers will accept it.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think I can be helpful to the Senator and at least clarify something. There is an amendment pending at the desk. The Senator from Delaware has an amendment at the desk that incorporates and includes exactly what the Senator from Virginia is attempting to do. So I would be happy to add the Senator as a cosponsor to that amendment. The exact amendment is at the desk in three parts. One of the three parts of the amendment is the proposed amendment of the Senator from Virginia that he has in his hand.

Mr. WARNER. I thank our distinguished colleague. I was away from the Chamber for a brief period. I was not aware of that. I would like to ask unanimous consent to be added as a cosponsor of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, which, as I understand, is a proposal the Senator from Virginia advocated here in the Senate for several months now.

Mr. BIDEN. And one we, in fact, passed under the Senator's leadership just last week on another bill.

Mr. WARNER. It would not have passed without his assistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina retains the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I again ask unanimous consent I be permitted to speak for a few minutes without the distinguished Senator from North Carolina losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I also have an amendment I hope will be accepted tonight on clinical laboratories so we can make sure that any testing that is done is fair and done in accordance with the standards. I would like to preserve my right to bring that up tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I will be delighted to yield to the majority leader under the previous condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the majority leader is recognized.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.; CONSIDERATION OF THE FLAG DESECRATION LEGISLATION; DELETE FLAG DESECRATION LEGISLATION AS LAST ITEM OF BUSINESS PRIOR TO THE RECESS; RESUME CONSIDERATION OF S. 1711

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have discussed the schedule for this evening with the managers and the distinguished Republican leader. I now ask unanimous consent that when the Senate recesses this evening it stand in recess until 10 a.m. tomorrow morning; that immediately following the prayer, the Senate begin consideration of the flag desecration statute legislation; that the requirement that it be the last item of business prior to the recess be deleted; and that upon disposition of the flag desecration legislation, the Senate resume consideration of S. 1711, the drug legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask for clarification from the majority leader. Is it my understanding that those of us who do have amendments to be offered to this bill can still do that this evening and the majority leader does not intend to recess the Senate before that opportunity?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct. It is my intention, Mr. President, if this unanimous-consent request is approved, that the managers would continue, to the extent they can do so under the existing situation—the Senator from North Carolina has the floor and his amendment is pending—to complete noncontroversial amendments that have been accepted, but that I will, upon acceptance of this agreement, indicate that there will be no further rollcall votes this evening and then we will return to this tomorrow when the Senate will then be in the same status it is now.

Mr. HELMS. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, this means that the pending Helms second-degree amendment will be carried over automatically to tomorrow because the yeas and nays have been ordered; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the Senate resumes consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, that will be the business before the Senate.

Mr. HELMS. The distinguished majority leader, I say to the Chair, has just stated there will be no further rollcall votes tonight and the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair observes that the unanimous-consent request included a request to the effect "after the disposition of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina." At least that was the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, that is not in my request. My request is that when the Senate recesses tonight, it stand in recess until 10 a.m. tomorrow; that at 10 a.m., immediately following the prayer, the Senate begin consideration of the flag desecration statute legislation, and that upon disposition of the flag desecration legislation the Senate resume consideration of S. 1711, at which time it is my understanding—I ask the Chair a parliamentary inquiry—the Senate would be in the same status it is now, or that it would be upon recess this evening with respect to S. 1711.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct. The request was made in that form.

Mr. HELMS. Reserving the right to object, and again I will not object, that does mean then I will have the floor tomorrow when consideration is resumed on this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the current unanimous-consent order would not be modified except to the extent it was specifically requested by the majority leader.

The Senator would not be guaranteed the floor with an intervening recess. If the Senator would request an amendment to that effect, that could be specifically included in the unanimous consent order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I modify my request to ask that upon disposition of the flag desecration legislation, the Senate resume consideration of S. 1711 and that the Senator from North Carolina then be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleagues. There will be no further rollcall this evening. The Senate will continue consideration of the pending drug legislation and take amendments. I believe the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Arizona have amendments which will be accepted—and the Senators from Indiana, California, and Utah. And, when they have taken all the aments they can, then we will finish this evening and start on the flag bill at 10 tommorrow.

I thank my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN].

AMENDMENT NO. 938

(Purpose: To amend the Higher Education Act to promote education regarding the harmful effects of alcohol abuse.)

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all pending amendments be set aside so that I might be permitted to offer an amendment to the underlying bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 938.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place add the following:

DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND CAMPUSES

SEC. . (a)(1) Title XIII of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION

"SEC. 1212. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no institution of higher education shall be eligible to receive any Federal funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal program, including participation in any federally funded or guaranteed student loan program, unless it certifies to the Secretary that, after study and participation by students, student groups, and employees, it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol by students and employees of such institution, a component of which shall include—

"(1) a prohibition on the distribution of free alcoholic beverages for promotional purposes on the campus of such institution;

"(2) a prohibition on the distribution of any promotional material for alcoholic beverages on the campus of any such institution;

"(3) a prohibition on the financing, sponsoring, or supporting of any athletic, musical, cultural or social program, event, or competition of such institution by any alcoholic beverage company or industry;

"(4) a limit on alcoholic beverage advertisements in such institution's newspapers and other publications to price and product identification; and

"(5) a description of any alcohol counseling, treatment, or rehabilitation program available to students and employees through the institution and the local community.

"(b) The Secretary shall publish regulations to implement and enforce the provisions of this section, including regulations that provide for—

"(1) the periodic review of a representative sample of programs required by subsection (a); and

"(2) sanctions, up to and including the termination of any form of financial assistance, for institutions of higher education that fail to implement their programs or to consistently enforce their sanctions.".

(2) The provisions of this section shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, last week, the distinguished Senator from Texas brought the importance of this issue to our attention when he offered a critically-important amendment to the fiscal year 1990 appropriations bill for the Department of Transportation.

That amendment, which would amend the Higher Education Act of 1965 and the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986, provides authorization for one component of the President's national drug control strategy.

The amendment focuses Federal, State, and local attention on the problems of illicit drug use and alcohol abuse in our Nation's schools and on our college campuses. But the amendment does not stop there. Senator GRAMM and the President propose realistic, verifiable solutions to this serious national problem.

Under their proposal, colleges and universities, as well as elementary and high schools, would be required to adopt and implement a comprehensive anti-drug and alcohol abuse strategy.

Noncompliance with this provision would result in the loss of Federal funding, including student financial aid.

The amendment, as Senator GRAMM stated when he first offered it, is an "accountability package." It would require that schools adopt policies that include:

Clear standards of conduct on the use of illicit drugs and alcohol on school campuses; and

A process for disseminating information on the health risks associated with drug use and alcohol abuse and the availability of treatment and rehabilitation programs.

As we commit ourselves to significantly increasing Federal assistance to our schools, for the benefit of our children, the accountability this amendment ensures is tremendously important.

Without question, we must ensure that we receive a full return on our investment. We must do this because our children's lives—and our country's future—are at stake. Senator GRAMM's amendment goes a long way toward securing that investment.

But as critical and effective as this amendment is, I believe that we must take it one step further. The amendment I am offering today goes that extra step. It strengthens one component of the Senator's amendment, which the President and this body have already embraced.

As I mentioned earlier, Senator GRAMM's amendment requires that all college and university anti-drug and alcohol abuse policies include:

"(A) standards of conduct that clearly prohibit, at a minimum, the unlawful possession, use or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and employees on its property or as part of any of its activities . . ."

My amendment simply ensures the accountability of this vital provision, and in so doing, has the potential of truly improving the quality of life for thousands of college-age youths and young adults across the country.

I believe that my amendment goes to the heart of the problem of alcohol abuse among college-age youth today. And there is no question that alcohol is the drug of choice on our Nation's college and university campuses.

We can increase sanctions, increase prison space, increase the role of the military, and implement all the prevention programs in the world. But if we do not also stem the promotion of alcohol use on our college and university campuses, we can never hope to achieve our goals.

We will never control the use of illicit drugs or the abuse of alcohol among this age group if we do not take the fundamental—though perhaps politically unpopular—step of encouraging colleges and universities to adopt policies on campus alcohol advertising and alcohol industry sponsorship of college activities.

My measure, which amends the Higher Education Act of 1965, would require that all colleges and universities adopt a set of policies governing:

First, alcoholic beverage marketing, advertising, and consumption; and Second, referral and treatment of students with alcohol problems.

Specifically, the policies should include:

A prohibition on the distribution of free alcoholic beverages or other promotional materials on college campuses;

A prohibition on alcoholic beverage industry sponsorship of events and publicity associated with athletic competition, music concerts, and other social or cultural events on college and university campuses.

A restriction in campus newspapers that limits the content of such ads to price and product identification.

Information on the availability of resources for students and employees with alcohol problems;

Dissemination of written information concerning these resources to all students and employees. These resources should include the availability of self-help groups including Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, ALAnon, as well as other counseling and treatment resources for alcoholism and other drug dependencies.

I believe this amendment is vital to the success of the President's drug strategy, and as I stated earlier, it would simply enhance the Gramm amendment. It would in no way limit or circumvent that important measure.

Indeed, some States have already realized the importance of the concept I am proposing and have passed laws to stop the inundation of alcohol advertising on their college campuses. The State of Utah prohibits all campus alcohol advertising. Washington State prohibits alcohol promotions on campus, and the State of Michigan bans all on-campus alcohol promotions and the hiring of alcohol campus representatives.

Some colleges have implemented policies on their own. The University of California at Berkeley now prohibits alcohol companies from sponsoring campus events.

Surgeon General Koop realized long ago the importance of this concept. Last year, in a series of recommendations based on his drunk driving workshop he called for the elimination of alcohol advertising and promotion on college campuses and the elimination of alcohol industry sponsorship of events where the majority of the audience is under the legal drinking age.

The Surgeon General, these States and these schools are all to be commended. They understand the seriousness of the problem confronting us, and they have had the courage to take action. They have put the lives of our children in front of support from the alcohol beverage industry.

They have made an investment in our future, and we all stand to be richer because of it. But we cannot stop there; we cannot simply point to excellent examples and talk about the seriousness of the problem any longer. We must have the courage and the conviction to take action.

My amendment takes that extra step.

The amendment is much needed. It is legislation that is very similar to that already enacted in several States. In my view, it is good legislation. I have cleared this with both the managers on the majority and minority sides. I urge my colleagues to adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BIDEN. We accept the amendment. It is a good amendment. I urge its adoption.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is a good amendment. I apologize to the Senate that he had to wait so long to get this amendment considered. I think it is a good amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate. If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment 938.

The amendment (No. 938) was agreed to.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 939

(Purpose: To require Department of Defense consultation with State and local law enforcement officials prior to and during any drug enforcement operation by Armed Forces or other Department of Defense personnel which might affect the law enforcement activities or jurisdiction of such officials)

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to setting aside all amendments? Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] proposes an amendment numbered 939.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE CONSULTATION WITH STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS.

(a) CONSULTATION REQUIRED.—Part I of subtitle A of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 380 the following new section:

"§ 381. Consultation with civilian law enforcement officials

"The Secretary of Defense shall consult with Operation Alliance officials to the extent practicable prior to and during any drug enforcement operation by armed forces personnel or other Department of Defense personnel which might affect the law enforcement activities or jurisdiction of such officials.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of the chapter relating to military support for civilian law enforcement agencies in such part is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 380 the following new item:

"381. Consultation with civilian law enforcement officials.".

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, this is an amendment which deals with the Secretary of Defense and the operation of the military involved in the war on drugs.

Mr. President, I am offering this amendment to ensure better coordination between the Department of Defense and State and local law enforcement officials along the Southwest border when the DOD undertakes a drug operation.

I have cleared this with both the ranking member, Senator WARNER, and the chairman of the Authorizing Committee, Senator NUNN. The amendment I am sponsoring requires the Secretary of Defense to consult—and I underscore consult—with Operation Alliance, which is the civilian antinarcotics task force composed of Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials along the Southwest border charged with the coordinating of drug interdiction activities, when the Secretary of Defense undertakes any drug-enforcement operations in the Southwest.

The reason this amendment is offered is that most recently the military under the direction apparently of Secretary Cheney decided to deploy and involve a large number of forces on the Southwest border. In doing so, they failed to even alert or consult with the Southwest Border Alliance, which is the umbrella organization operated by the Federal Government, by the Border Patrol, in particular, that deals with local State, and Federal law enforcement officials.

This amendment merely says that the Secretary shall consult before or during the time they are deploying troops along the Southwest border.

I believe the amendment has been cleared by both the distinguished manager of the bill and the ranking member.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate. If not the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am willing to go along with the distinguished Senator from Virginia on this amendment but I understand that we still have one other party who needs to clear it.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia was informed by the Senator from Arizona that the chairman of the Armed Services Committee had reviewed this, that he had approved it, and on that basis I indicate the concurrence of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DECONCINI. The Senator from Virginia is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the DeConcini amendment be temporarily set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 940

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of myself, Senator WILSON, and Senator DECONCINI, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], for himself, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. DECONCINI, proposed an amendment numbered 940.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . ISSUANCE OF DRUG WAR BONDS.

"(B) The amounts which are required to be transferred under subparagraph (A) shall be transferred at least monthly from the general fund of the Treasury of the United States to the Trust Fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts referred to in subparagraph (A) that are received into the Treasury. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be transferred.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table of sections for subchapter I of chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"3114. Issuance of drug war bonds.".

(2) Section 3108 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and 3105-3107" and inserting in lieu thereof ", 3105-3107, and 3114".

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this amendment has been reviewed by both sides and has been accepted. I will briefly state that the United States has had a number of success stories with bonds, two of those relating to the use of bonds for specific patriotic purposes. During World War II, this Nation sold some $200 billion worth of bonds to help support the war effort. We have continued this under our current savings bond program.

In the last 3 years we have sold in excess of $20 billion of U.S. savings bonds. These programs have been successful because they not only provided means by which Americans could save but also a means by which Americans could be direct participants in important national efforts, be they war or peace.

The amendment which I offer this evening on behalf of Senator WILSON, Senator DECONCINI, and myself, would apply the same principle by authorizing special issue of savings bonds for the purpose of assisting in financing the war on drugs.

These bonds would be for all purposes the same as our current EE series savings bonds except they would be denominated specifically as war on drugs bonds. They would be issued in small unit addendums so that as in World War II they might be purchased by schoolchildren, and the proceeds would go into a discreet trust fund the proceeds of which would be restricted to those items that had been appropriated having been previously authorized under the 1988 Drug Act as it might be amended.

Mr. President, that is the basic outline of what I believe is a very sound application of an old principle to a new opportunity to give Americans the chance to directly participate in the war on drugs.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am delighted to join with my friend from Florida and my friend from Arizona in this amendment. Earlier in the session the Senator from Florida and I offered different versions of this particular amendment. We offered it on a free-standing bill.

Let me point out that what is before us tonight in the form of the amendment of the Senator from Florida does not augment spending but it does something perhaps as important. It allows us, as he said, provide a mechanism for participation by the broad public in the United States who have said to the drug czar, Mr. Bennett, and who have said to each of us at one time or another "What can I do? I want to be a participant in the war on drugs."

As my friend from Florida has pointed out, this takes a leaf from history, specifically the success that the United States had involving the American people, ordinary citizens, little schoolchildren in World War II who were able to purchase stamps, fill books, and redeem them for war bonds, series E Liberty bonds with which many on this floor are familiar.

What he has provided is that mechanism once again. I think it is a very significant thing. It will be appreciated by those seeking that opportunity to be directly in some small way participants in fighting the war on drugs. I think it is a very good idea. I commend the Senator, and I am pleased to join him in that effort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] is recognized.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I compliment the Senator from Florida who has been beating on all of us on this amendment for some time—not tonight—but for the past year. I compliment him, and I compliment the Senator from California. It is a good amendment.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah, [Mr. HATCH] is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is a good amendment. I compliment both distinguished Senators from California and Florida. This is an interesting amendment. I hope it can help us in this great battle.

We accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment (No. 940) was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 941

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, earlier I had debated the amendment which I now send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. COATS], for himself, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. REID, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. LOTT, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. D'AMATO, and Mr. BURNS, proposes an amendment numbered 941.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, add the following:

"The Bureau of Justice Assistance shall provide funds for demonstration grants to the States to establish shock incarceration programs as alternatives to imprisonment for first-time offenders who have committed nonviolent offenses and nonviolent drug offenses, 90 percent of which funds shall be reserved and set aside in a special discretionary fund for use by the Director to make grants, and the remainder of which funds to make grants to provide compulsory drug treatment, as required, and literacy education, vocational education, and job training programs by the State or jointly by the State and private entities which shall be made available to nonviolent offenders selected for confinement in boot camp programs: Provided, That no grants shall be expended for more than 70 percent of the cost of the project for which such grant is made and no Federal funds made available to the State shall be used to supplant State or local funds that would otherwise be used to carry out such project.".

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, this amendment has already been described. I believe it is acceptable by both the majority and the minority. I leave my statement at that.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN].

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we accept the amendment. It is a fine amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we agree with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment (No. 941) was agreed to.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER] is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I am one who wants to be cooperative. I want to address the Chair and get the attention of the managers.

For some time, the Senator from Virginia together with the assistance of the distinguished Presiding Officer, the junior Senator from Virginia, has been endeavoring to amend the statute which is essential to our State law enforcement; namely, it will enable our law enforcement to continue to participate in the proceeds taken from drug seizures.

With the help of the distinguished managers of this bill and others the Senator from Virginia was able to pass an amendment to H.R. 3015, the Department of Transportation appropriations for fiscal year 1990, an amendment which I have in hand now. I addressed this earlier to the distinguished Senator from Delaware, and he assured me it was identical. I know it is a late night. It is not identical.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me how it differs?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia had an amendment to H.R. 3015. The amendment had three sections. I will read the last section. "The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1990." That was to give it a retroactive state. I find that to be an essential part of the amendment that the Senator from Virginia is trying to advocate.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield.

Mr. WARNER. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I apologize. It was an unintentional misleading. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia that I will not agree to accept the amendment for a simple reason: I have had an underlying amendment on forfeiture now for the past 4 hours, which the Republican side seems unable to clear in any way.

I would be delighted to clear the amendment of the Senator from Virginia on forfeiture, which is not identical, but is very close to identical, but for the fact of the retroactivity which I am prepared to accept.

The only way I know, I would like to enlist the distinguished and influential Senator from Virginia in the battle to get the amendment of the Senator from Delaware that has been, I think, unnecessarily laid aside for the past 4 hours, on this forfeiture amendment.

So for the time being, I will object to accepting that amendment. But I assure the Senator I will accept the amendment, but not at this moment. I am being perfectly blunt and honest with you.

Quite frankly, I am being told that the administration will not sign off on the forfeiture amendment and, yet, the Senator from Delaware is prepared to sign off on a number of amendments that the administration has also not signed off on, like the one we just adopted of the Senator from Indiana.

So that is the reason I will object temporarily to accepting the amendment. Obviously, we can debate it, but there is nothing to debate, because I agree with the Senator, except I would be compelled to talk a while. Until we get the administration to move on the forfeiture amendment that has been sitting at the desk—I say 4 hours. It is probably closer to 7 hours.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will yield, one of the problems is——

Mr. WARNER. Use a little more booming voice. The Senator from Utah is not known to be modest.

Mr. HATCH. One of the problems is that the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is 47 pages long. If it was identical to or similar to the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Virginia, I do not think there would be any trouble accepting it. The problem is that with that length, it is very difficult to get it accepted and through the process as quickly as we would like to. So that is part of the problem.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia still has the floor. He has yielded for purposes of questions from the two managers. I think to protect and safeguard the law enforcement officers in the Commonwealth of Virginia and other law enforcement officers throughout America, who tonight are on the streets risking their lives, I am going to send this amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. When is it not required to gain unanimous consent to be able to send the amendment to the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be required for the Senator to gain unanimous consent.

Mr. BIDEN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WARNER. The Senator from Virginia carefully listened to the Chair on the previous amendment. That request was not made, and the Chair recognized the Senator for purposes of sending up an amendment.

I felt that the same courtesy would be extended to the Senator from Virginia. I recognize and fully appreciate the predicament the manager of the bill presently finds himself in, but I am an innocent victim. I am concerned about the Senate's ability to consider an amendment which is identical in every respect with an amendment accepted by the Senate but a few days ago and which in large part is contained in an amendment that is pending from the Senator from Delaware.

I am wondering if the Senator from Delaware—I am perfectly willing to allow this amendment to be set aside until such time as the Senator from Delaware resolves his problems. But the Senator from Virginia has an amendment which is quite similar in a very material aspect to the amendment presently at the desk from the Senator from Delaware. I do not intend to take up further time of the Senate tonight.

I ask that the same courtesy be extended to this Senator as was other Senators who did not see fit to ask of the necessity to lay aside the pending amendment.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I yield for an inquiry from the manager.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia yields for what purpose?

Mr. WARNER. For the inquiry of the manager.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. BIDEN. It is my understanding that this is an inquiry.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I cannot hear back here.

Mr. BIDEN. It is my understanding that every single amendment that has been sent to the desk subsequent to the Helms amendment—to be more precise, every single amendment that has been sent to the desk subsequent to the Biden amendment on forefeiture, every single one—has required a unanimous-consent agreement that the Biden, and then later other amendments, in addition to the Biden amendment, be set aside in order for that particular amendment to be considered. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair that each amendment offered during the time period stated has required and has received unanimous consent.

Mr. BIDEN. Yes. So the point that the Senator from Delaware makes is there was no discrimination against the Senator from Virginia. The second point I wish to make, as the author of this original legislation, as the man who wrote it in the first instance in 1984, as the man who fought for 4 years to get the administration and others to accept this proposition, as the man who argued with the Carter administration, as well a the Reagan administration, to pass the forfeiture legislation, which inadvertently was amended in my absence, I might add, and probably would have been anyway, but in my absence, I have full appreciation for the need to do this.

If we are all looking for lineage in terms of our commitment to forefeiture legislation, I would claim to be the father of this legislation, which is of no value to claim at all this late at night. I say that only to make the following point: I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, but to say that the 8-page—not 48-page—amendment that the Senator from Delaware has at the desk, contains this provision, absent the retroactive portion, which I am prepared to accept—I would like very much to bring up the underlying, underlying, underlying, underlying amendment of the Senator from Delaware on forefeiture. I have been as gracious as anyone in allowing all the other amendments to come up tonight.

I have been waiting for close to 5 or 6 hours for the administration to clear the amendment that the Senator from Delaware wrote over 5 years ago.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. That is the only reason I am reluctant at this moment to give unanimous consent.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I want to accommodate the managers. So I yield the floor for purposes of the managers. But I would like to retain it at the conclusion of their statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KERRY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. I would simply like to inquire as to the parliamentary process at this point.

Those of us who waive our additional amendments, shall we anticipate those will have an opportunity to come up?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I make a suggestion to the distinguished majority manager here to break this logjam tonight. I understand what the distinguished floor manager is saying. We are, in good faith, trying to clear this amendment. I will push that as hard as I can.

I think he has expressed more than the accommodation for the distinguished Senator from Virginia that he would accept this amendment, but he is trying to put pressure on the administration and others who are looking at his amendment to move expeditiously. It is apparent we are not going to solve that problem tonight.

I suggest we dispose of the DeConcini amendment, the Jeffords amendment, and the Kerry amendment if we can, and the distinguished floor manager at least allow the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Virginia to be sent to the desk and be pending to be set aside.

If the Senator from Virginia is willing to do so we can proceed with the others and we will dispose of this tomorrow. I think it is a reasonable thing to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia wants to be cooperative and completely leave the floor as quickly as possible.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Virginia the following then, in the interest of cooperation, whether or not he would be willing to call up the Biden amendment, amend it by the Warner amendment to put in the retroactive date. If he is willing to do that I am perfectly willing to accommodate. If he is unwilling to accommodate, then it seems to me there is only one thing occurring here.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I will answer I am willing to do it.

Mr. BIDEN. Wonderful.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Biden amendment on forfeiture, which has been at the desk in memoria, be brought up for the purpose of being amended by the Senator from Virginia to include his retroactive provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and the managers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield the floor?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I will yield momentarily.

If I understand the situation now, as to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia that section relating to retroactive has now been incorporated in the part of the amendment pending by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. That is correct, yes.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, further as I understood the distinguished managers of the bill, if for some reasons, and those reasons are not under the control of the Senator from Virginia, the amendment of the Senator from Delaware does not pass the Senate, could we have the understanding at that time the managers would accept the amendment sent to the desk by the Senator from Virginia for purposes of incorporation in this bill?

Mr. BIDEN. I wish the Senator had not asked me that. I would have to say that, yes, I wish he asked me that in private.

What will happen now is the administration will not agree with the amendment of the Senator from Delaware knowing full well they will only get the part of the amendment they are willing to agree to and the Senator from Delaware will just have scuttled the amendment.

In the interest of time and comity to the Senator from Virginia I will agree to that.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, if I have in any manner that is unfair levied upon my distinguished colleague and friend from Delaware, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. BIDEN. Then let me say there is nothing unfair about the request of the Senator from Virginia. It just is that the Senator from Virginia was unfortunate. As our former colleague Howard Baker used to say when complicated situations arose, "I hain't got no dog in that fight," unfortunately, the Senator from Virginia happened on a dog fight, was unaware one was on the way, made a good-faith request that is in every respect reasonable and makes great sense. His intentions are always as they are tonight: Pure. I never question the motivation. But there was a dog fight going on that the Senator from Virginia found himself walking into.

Having said that, I do not care about the dog fight any more. It is 11:25 p.m. He is a gentleman and a scholar; he is always a good man to work with. I will keep the commitment that if for some reason the amendment of the Senator from Delaware does not move I will support the Senator from Virginia moving independently.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia yields the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, if I may ask a parliamentary procedure; is it necessary, in order to go back to the DeConcini amendment, to ask unanimous consent that the Biden underlying amendment be set aside? Or is that already accomplished?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will require unanimous consent in order to return to the DeConcini amendment.

Mr. DECONCINI. I so make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 939

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am offering an amendment which will ensure better coordination between the Department of Defense and State and local law enforcement officials along the Southwest border when the DOD undertakes a drug operation.

The amendment I am sponsoring requires the Secretary of Defense to consult with Operation Alliance, which is the civilian antinarcotics task force, composed of Federal, State and local law enforcement officials along the Southwest border, charged with coordinating drug interdiction activities there, when the Secretary of Defense undertakes any drug enforcement operation in the Southwest.

Mr. President, in 1988 the Department of Defense was given the lead role for detection and monitoring for the aerial and maritime transit of illegal drugs entering the United States. At that same time, the Congress authorized the Department of Defense to provide to States funds for the "pay, allowances, clothing subsistence, gratuities, travel and related expenses of personnel of the National Guard" of each State for the purpose of drug interdiction and enforcement operations.

I supported that provision in the National Defense Authorization Act of 1989 as I believed and still do believe that if we are serious about waging a real war on drugs in this country, that we need to mobilize all of our Nation's resources and use to the maximum extent possible, those resources of the military.

In utilizing the Nation's military personnel in this war on drugs, we must ensure that there is some type of a consultation process so that the military is not moving into States on their own without notifying civilian law enforcement agencies. Unfortunately, that is exactly what is happening.

Mr. President, I was recently contacted by State and local law enforcement officials in Arizona regarding the use of the military along the Southwest border. These individuals had recently been briefed on a major operation being planned between the Immigration and Naturalization Service [INS] and the Fifth Army Command. At the time of the briefing, not only had the State and local officials not been consulted or briefed on the joint operations between INS and the Army, but Operation Alliance had not been included in the negotiations.

These law enforcement officials, like myself, are not opposed to the use of the military in a support role in the war on drugs. The problem is that law enforcement officials want to be ensured that the coordination and cooperation which has been built up during the past couple of years along the border continues.

In the past 5 years, I have chaired several antidrug hearings in the Southwest and at each hearing I have heard of improved relations between local, State, and Federal law enforcement agencies. As a former county prosecutor in Arizona, I can tell you first hand that this was not always the case. State and local law enforcement are on this Nation's front line in the war against drugs and crime. This Nation's effort in the war on drugs cannot be successful without the total cooperation and assistance of State and local law enforcement agencies.

In regard to Operation Alliance, this Federal entity was created in 1986 to provide a vehicle along the Southwest border that could coordinate Federal, State, and local drug enforcement efforts. It took 2 years before Operation Alliance really got off the ground, but today they are proving to be an extremely useful tool. With Operation Alliance, State and local law enforcement officials are better able to keep up to date on the Federal efforts being implemented along the border and they are better able to avoid being caught between two Federal agencies.

While the sharing of information related to all drug enforcement operations may present a difficult problem for the passing of sensitive investigation related information, it seems to me that the Secretary of Defense should at the very least, consult with civilian law enforcement when he is about to undertake a very major operation which involves an infusion of large numbers of military personnel into an area, or other operations which affects State and local law enforcement jurisdiction.

If the Secretary of Defense formulates a plan to send troops to the Southwest border to enhance interdiction and enforcement efforts there, the Secretary should be consulting with civilian law enforcement officials who may very well have legitimate concerns about the impact the operation may have on their own activities.

The amendment I am offering simply requires the Secretary of Defense, to the extent practicable, to consult with Operation Alliance, the official law enforcement coordinating body for the Southwest border, prior to and during any drug enforcement operation.

If the military is going to be conducting operations along the Southwest border they must first consult with Operation Alliance. In turn, Operation Alliance must see to it that the appropriate State and local law enforcement agencies are contacted. Coordination and cooperation is the key. The military must play by the same rules as any law enforcement agency involved in the fight against illegal drugs.

Mr. President, I believe this is a fairly noncontroversial amendment, but one which is sorely needed. In our enthusiasm to stem the flow of drugs into this country, we must ensure the proper communication and consultation process to eliminate any potential conflicts between and amongst law enforcement agencies.

Under current law, the Secretary of Defense is required to hold an annual briefing for State and local law enforcement personnel. Mr. President, I am advised that those annual briefings are not occurring but should be. If the Department of Defense is going to continue to be a major player in the war on drugs, they must be sensitive to the needs of State and local law enforcement officials. This amendment will ensure the communication that is now lacking, albeit intentionally or not.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. President, I believe that the managers of the bill and the ranking member have agreed now to accept my amendment. I thank them.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the distinguished Senator from Virginia is prepared to accept the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Arizona and therefore we on the minority side will be pleased to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Utah has correctly stated. I am willing to accept the amendment. But he has also put in a very important condition that at the time he is concerned with the conferees should there be any question by the Department of Defense that question would be fairly addressed by the conferees. There could be some technical aspect of this I am not able to ascertain at this late hour.

Mr. DECONCINI. If the Senator will yield, absolutely I realize the conferees have to make the final approval here. I am interested in getting this amendment in the package. So hopefully it will be cleared and become part of the law and if the Defense Department wants to participate in that I know the Senator will welcome it as will I.

I thank the distinguished chairman and ranking member in cooperating and helping this amendment pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further debate on the amendment as offered by the Senator from Arizona?

The question is on ageeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment (No. 939) was agreed to.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 942

(Purpose: To provide for the establishment of a demonstration program to provide grants to provide drug abuse resistance education to students grades kindergarten through six, and for other purposes)

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, the distinguished Presiding Officer, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. DECONCINCI, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. D'AMATO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] for himself, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. D'AMATO, proposes an amendment numbered 942.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . (a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Education is authorized to award grants to local educational agencies in consortium with entities which have experience in assisting school districts to provide instruction to students grades kindergarten through six to recognize and resist pressures that influence such students to use controlled substances, as defined in schedules I and II of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812), the possession or distribution of which is unlawful under such Act, or beverage alcohol, such as Project Drug Abuse Resistance Education, that meet the requirements of subsection (b).

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—A local education agency in consortium with an entity shall not be eligible for a grant under subsection (a) unless such local education agency in consortium with an entity will use assistance provided under such grant to provide or arrange for the provision of services that shall include—

(1) drug abuse resistance education instruction for students grades kindergarten through six to recognize and resist pressures to experiment that influence such children to use controlled substances, as defined under subsection (a), or beverage alcohol, including instruction in the following areas—

(A) drug use and misuse;
(B) resistance techniques;
(C) assertive response styles;
(D) managing stress without taking drugs;
(E) decision making and risk taking;
(F) media influences on drug use;

(G) positive alternatives to drug abuse behavior;

(H) interpersonal and communication skills;

(I) self-esteem building activities; and

(J) resistance to gang pressure;

(2) classroom instruction by law enforcement officials;

(3) the use of positive student leaders to influence younger students not to use drugs; and

(4) an emphasis on activity-oriented techniques designed to encourage student-generated responses to problem-solving situations; and

(c) APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

(3) the application otherwise is in such form, agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this section; and

(4) the application contains an assurance that the applicant will provide funds, either in cash or in kind that are not less than 10 percent of the amount of the grant under subsection (a);

(d) SUPPLEMENTAL FUNDS.—Amounts received under subsection (a) by the entity shall be used only to supplement, not to supplant, the amount of Federal, State, and local funds expended for the support of projects of the type described in subsection (b); and

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $10 million in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 3 succeeding fiscal years.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I will save the clerk the reading. It is a simple amendment.

It states there should be authorized some $10 million to provide for the use in those school districts throughout the land who require some assistance, the opportunity that they may engage in that kind of drug education that has been identified throughout the land as the DARE Program, DARE being the acronym, drug abuse resistance education.

Mr. President, I believe every State in the Nation contains a school district that employs this program. It has been a single success, but there are districts that would like to provide it but cannot and do need some assistance. This has been a success because it is a program that does simply more than cite drug deals. On a regular basis with young school children, that is to say those in fourth, fifth, and sixth grades, at least once a week for an entire semester, for more than a year, a technique has been evolved, the technique of instruction whereby students in these grades, kindergarten through six recognize and resist pressures to experiment.

Elements of the instruction include the teaching of drug use and misuse, resistance techniques, assertive response styles, managing stress without taking drugs, decisionmaking and risk taking, media influences on drug use, positive alternatives to drug abuse behavior, interpersonal and communication skills, self-esteem building activities, and resistance to gang pressure.

A single characteristic of this program of instruction is that it is taught by law enforcement officials, those who have been specifically selected for that purpose.

In this technique the use of positive student leaders to influence young students to not use drugs has been also a very successful element and there is an emphasis on techniques to student-generated response to problem solving situations.

In short, Mr. President, the DARE Program has been a success. It is one in wide use. We seek to widen the use further to those districts that can use some assistance in providing this help. It is prevention of the most effective kind.

Mr. President, it has been accepted, I believe, by both the majority and the minority.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the majority accepts the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the minority accepts the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 942) was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 943

(Purpose: To establish an Electronic Scanning Task Force for the purposes of making recommendations concerning methods of making certain U.S. currency notes traceable by electronic scanning)

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] proposes an amendment numbered 943.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, this amendment represents a slight modification of legislation I filed in July. It would require the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a panel of private sector experts to prepare cost estimates and an implementation plan for making the serial number on U.S. currency readable by inexpensive, commonly available optical scanners, such as those used in grocery stores, factories, and businesses across the country and around the world.

Adopting this provision would empower law enforcement agencies, financial institutions and international investigators to begin to use the latest technologies to track the flow of illegal money.

We've all heard the expression "marked bills," such as the FBI making a payment to a criminal in a sting using marked bills.

What most people do not think about is that all bills are marked, in that they have serial numbers. The problem is, that serial numbers do not get used much by law enforcement, because the compilation and reading of numbers is time consuming and has had to be be done manually.

While there are computers available which could theoretically read the green ink block letters that make up the serial numbers on bills, this equipment costs hundreds of thousands of dollars per unit, according to estimates obtained by my office.

By contrast, bar coding technologies now can read alphanumeric codes cheaply and efficiently. Bar-coded symbols are now used to keep track of video cassettes, blood supplies, evidence in local police departments, and even, ironically enough, large bulk shipments of currency into and out of the Federal Reserve in New York.

The technology is based on light pens, laser scanners and personal computers, and is extremely affordable. It is a decentralized technology, which can be used by small teams working out of local police departments, remote undercover drug enforcement agents, or bankers.

It provides a mechanism by which our Government, our law enforcement agencies, our financial institutions, and foreign institutions as well can efficiently track U.S. currency—bill by bill—without any undue administrative burdens.

These machines can count and track bar-coded currency as quickly as they currently count and check for counterfeit currency.

Let's make clear that I do not envision this system being used to keep track of every bill and every cash transaction throughout the country. Some have jumped to the conclusion that the next step after this bill is passed is to require every financial institution to keep track of every bill.

This is not the case.

Let me explain some of the ways in which we may want to use this:

Last Friday, in Los Angeles, Federal authorities confiscated or seized the largest cache of cocaine ever found in the United States, with a wholesale value of more than $2 billion.

Along with the cocaine was $20 million in currency. If this technology had been in place during the last year or so, we could have scanned this $20 million to determine from what cities the currency came from.

We would know this because undercover agents making large cocaine purchases in those cities would be using bills that had been scanned and entered into a data base. This kind of information would give us invaluable insights into the flows of the international drug distribution networks.

Another example. Let's suppose that investigators suspect a connection between a certain front business and illegal drug sellers. For example, they believe a certain restaurant might be commingling its currency with the profits of drugs.

By seeking the cooperation of certain banks, and using marked bills to make purchases from the suspected sellers, the investigators could easily trace in a verifiable manner the flow of those bills through a supposedly legitimate enterprise to determine whether it was laundering the money.

Last week, in testimony before the subcommittee which I chair in the Foreign Relations Committee, the Drug Enforcement Administration explained how they have had to curtail their use of marked currencies because of the enormous difficulty in keeping track of tens of thousands of serial numbers manually.

They testified that the availability of bar coding currency combined with increasingly sophisticated and powerful computer technology would be a valuable law enforcement tool.

In July, when I introduced this bill, copies were made available to the Treasury Department with the request for comment and further information.

Unfortunately, despite repeated calls, the Treasury Department has so far not provided any response.

However, I have discussed this with Federal Reserve Bank officials in New York and Washington, and I have been told that the Federal Reserve has no concerns with the printing of serial numbers using the new bar code method.

Moreover, my staff has had informal conversations with Treasury regarding the currency provision, and were informed that Treasury had no objection to an anemdment which only required a plan at this time, rather than actual implementation by a certain date, as the original bill required.

This amendment, while putting us on the path toward the adoption of bar codes, does not mandate that they be placed on U.S. currency by a certain date. Instead, it commissions a study to determine how bar coding could properly be implemented on our currency, with that study to conclude in a report to the Congress in 6 months. At that time, depending on what the study concludes, I would expect this body to consider whether it wishes the United States to adopt bar coding on our currency as a means of assisting law enforcement in fighting money laundering.

Mr. President, this amendment has been approved by both sides. It requires a study by the Treasury with respect to placing bar codes for electronic scanning on U.S. currency. This is a technique that would greatly assist law enforcement in the process of tracking money which is used in narcotics trafficking. I know the Treasury Department has accepted the concept of doing a study on this feasibility process.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator. I do not want to take the time of the body at this hour of the night, but if we were earlier in the day, I could spend a good half an hour pointing out to this body how much useful and significant work the Senator from Massachusetts has done on what everyone acknowledges to be one of the two or three most significant undertakings we could do in order to make progress in dealing with drug trafficking, and that is the money laundering issue.

I wish to compliment him on it. I, quite frankly, wish it were not a study. I wish we were just moving to it. But I acknowledge that this is the best the Senator can do at this point. I cannot help but believe that this position will prevail.

Again, I compliment him. We are happy to accept the amendment for study.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the minority is ready and willing to accept this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 943) was agreed to.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside so that I may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 944

(Purpose: To require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a study concerning the relationship between an individual's consumption of legal drugs and the consumption or abuse by the individual of illegal drugs)

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] proposes an amendment numbered 944.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . STUDY ON THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE CONSUMPTION OF LEGAL AND ILLEGAL DRUGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For assistance in designing prevention programs to reduce the likelihood of drug abuse, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall conduct a study concerning the relationship between an individual's receptivity to use or consume legal drugs and the consumption or abuse by the individual of illegal drugs.

(b) CONTENTS.—The study conducted under subsection (a) shall contain information concerning—

(1) the effect of advertising and marketing campaigns that promote the use of legal drugs on the public;

(2) the correlation of legal drug abuse with illegal drug abuse; and

(3) other matters that the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines appropriate.

(c) DATA AND RESEARCH.—In conducting the study under subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall consider data collected and current research concerning drug abuse and gateway drugs.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit, to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate, a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $1,000,000.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, my amendment would direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a study into the relationship between the tendency to consume legal drugs and the tendency to use illegal drugs.

Clearly our society has become more dependent on drugs—not necessarily illegal drugs—but legal drugs as well. We live in a highly advanced society where medicine has provided answers and cures for what once where fatal illnesses.

Drugs have been the linchpin to these advances. They have provided hope where none used to be not just to fatal illnesses, but also physical and internal problems.

But the question which begs to be answered is whether drugs play too important a role in our society—are they being used not just to save a life but also do they result in an expectation or relief or gratification, leading to use of illegal drugs.

In U.S. society, people have come to expect that "if you have a headache, we have a pill. If you are too fat, we have a pill. If you are too skinny, we have a pill." Marketing campaigns glorify the use of drugs and promise a cure for either physical or emotional ailments.

The National Commission of Marijuana and Drug Abuse, in one of its studies found that, "15 percent of the U.S. adult population reported that they "take a pill to calm down or cheer up" when they feel out of sorts, not really sick, but nervous, or depressed or under stress.

An estimated 18 percent of the population uses alcohol in a similar fashion. Furthermore the Commission noted that popular culture adds to the problem. "Drug taking, both legal and illegal, is a commonplace activity among the characters one encounters in our literature, on stage, and on television. More and more people are using drugs as if they were the only possible solution to the inevitable hardships of life * * *."

This sort of dependency worries me. Do we have a culture that encourages substance abuse? Is instant gratification our society's motivation? If the answer is yes, then there is no accident that drug abuse, which is but a radical form of instant gratification, should thrive in such an atmosphere.

My amendment simply asks that an indepth study be done to see if, in fact, a correlation exists between the use of legal and illegal drugs. An answer to this question may in return answer a yet greater question of whether our society is a root cause for the drug abuse crisis in this Nation.

If the answer is yes then it will be critically important to begin to tailor our education system to address this situation. Drug education cannot be effective if it is in a vaccum. Instead it must target all relevant areas of the drug crisis including the influence of legal as well as illegal substances.

Mr. President, I believe both sides have agreed to the amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, as I said just a few moments ago, the hour is late, but I cannot help but comment. You can tell the folks around here that know their trade.

I compliment the Senator from Vermont. It is obvious he spent some time in the House, because of the way in which he moves. He knows at this hour of the night the best thing to do. He knows exactly what to request and exactly how to do it, and exactly how to move on.

Notwithstanding the fact that he moved quickly through his amendment, I do not think we should shortchange it in terms of its importance and significance.

The Senator from Delaware and the majority are happy to accept the amendment. I compliment him on the effort and also in watching him work.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I join with the distinguished majority floor manager in all of his comments. This is an ingenious amendment and one that I think will do some good. I certainly accept it on the part of the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERRY). Is there further debate on the amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment (No. 944) was agreed to.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 923, AS MODIFIED

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware would like to point out that we have, I think, some good news. Through the gracious cooperation, I am told, of the Justice Department, the minority, I believe, is prepared to clear the forfeiture amendment. Is that correct? I was just informed of that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Biden forfeiture amendment, which is somewhere at the bottom of the pile there; I am not sure how to ask this—be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Section 511(e)(1)(B) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(e)(1)(B)) and section 2254(f)(2) of title 18, United States Code, are each amended by inserting ", by public sale or any other commercially feasible means," after "sell".

SEC. 21. CLARIFICATION OF CIVIL FORFEITURE SEIZURE WARRANT AUTHORITY.

Section 981(b)(2) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "has obtained a warrant for such seizure pursuant to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure" and inserting "has obtained a warrant for such seizure in the same manner as provided for a search warrant under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure".

SEC. 22. FORFEITURE AND DESTRUCTION OF DANGEROUS, TOXIC, AND HAZARDOUS MATERIALS.

Section 511(f) of the Controlled Substance Act (21 U.S.C. 881(f)) is amended by inserting "; all dangerous, toxic, or hazarous raw materials or products subject to forfeiture under subsection (a)(2) of this section; and any equipment or container subject to forfeiture under subsection (a) (2) or (3) which cannot be separated safely from such raw materials or products" after "this title" wherever it appears.

SEC. 23. ELIMINATION OF RESTRICTION ON DISPOSAL OF JUDICIALLY FORFEITED PROPERTY BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT AND THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Section 981(e) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "The authority granted to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postal Service pursuant to this subsection shall apply only to property that has been administratively forfeited.".

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I bored the Senate with why I thought this was a useful and important amendment earlier this evening. I will not take any more of the Senate's time. Needless to say, the majority accepts the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am happy at this late hour on this very tough day that the administration and all concerned have approved this amendment. Again, I wish to pay tribute to and compliment the distinguished majority floor manager who has worked so hard to get forfeiture amendments through the years, who has worked so hard on these antidrug issues, and who has been a singular leader in the Congress in these particular areas. I personally feel very good about having his amendment adopted here this evening and certainly the minority accepts his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I stepped off the floor momentarily. Is the famous Biden-Warner amendment now about to be passed?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the answer is yes, famous only because Senator WARNER has amended it.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague. I am prepared to give a loud "yea" when the time comes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 923), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 945

(Purpose: To determine the status of United States' efforts to convene a hemispheric conference on drug trafficking and drug abuse)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be set aside for the purposes of sending an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 945.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Public Law 100-690, the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, included specific provisions (sections 4101, 4103, 4104, 4105 and 4106) relating to multilateral narcotics control efforts;

(2) the need for international cooperation in order to fight organized and violent drug traffickers, to exchange drug interdiction intelligence, and to create drug treatment research, has been recognized by countries that produce, consume, or serve as transshipment points for illegal narcotics;

(3) the United States must assume a leadership role in the multinational movement to combat drugs;

(b) Therefore, the Secretary of State is required to submit to the Congress of the United States a report on the status of the efforts the Department of State has made or intends to make in order to carry out Sections 4101, 4103, 4104, and 4105 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 regarding multilateral drug control efforts.

This report shall be submitted to Congress no later than December 1, 1989.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this amendment, which has been cleared on both sides, relates to various provisions which were adopted in the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act directing the State Department to take actions, such as actions within the Organization of American States, convening meetings of various officials in this hemisphere, and other international efforts.

The 1988 act did not, in some instances, provide for a clear reporting mechanism from the State Department to the Congress as to what actions were taken under those directives. The purpose of this amendment is to direct the Secretary of State to submit to the Congress a report on the status of the department's efforts in these various areas and to do so by December 1 of this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I see no objection to this amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment (No. 945) was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 946

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be set aside for the purpose of sending an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] proposes an amendment numbered 946.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike Simon Amendment No. 922 except sections 61-63, and 74 of that amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Republican manager of the bill that this amendment is a technical amendment to conform the Simon amendment to what it was represented to be. It, inadvertently, is slightly different from how it was represented.

I fully understand, as I see the looks on the faces of my colleagues and the staff, they obviously have not seen this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment is accepted by the minority. We understand it is to correct a technical error that was in the Simon amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. That is correct. The Simon amendment at the desk does slightly more than it was advertised to have done when we accepted it, so we want to make sure it conforms with what it was represented to be.

Mr. HATCH. That is my understanding. We accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment (No. 946) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the hour is late. I have been here about 17 hours. The Senator from Utah about the same. One of two things happens at this hour, either people become very complimentary, and in the case of the compliments delivered to the Senator from Delaware, undeservedly complimented, or we get very bitter and it becomes rancorous.

It has been a pleasure and will continue to be a pleasure to work with the Senator from Utah. Notwithstanding the occasions when we differ, we have never had difficulty working together. I truly mean it. I compliment my colleague on the way he has managed this, particularly since he not only has had to clear all these amendments with the other side, but also with the administration. I think he and his staff have done a herculean job on his side, and although we have not finished with this, we have certainly moved a long, long way, going through what could have been an incredibly difficult evening.

We have passed tonight 30 amendments. I am not sure that sets a record, but they are not insignificant amendments.

Again I particularly want to thank the staff. They are first rate. And I appreciate the cooperation tonight. We have more to do tomorrow, but I wanted to say that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong this because it is late and it is time for all of us to go. I know the distinguished Senator from Delaware would like to shut the Senate down, and everybody would like to go, but I want to say it has been a pleasure to work with him and his staff as well. We have worked together on some tremendously difficult, complex matters on the Judiciary Committee and elsewhere in the Senate. Every time we have, it has been a pleasure to work with people who are gentlemen and gentle ladies, who really are working in the best interest of our country.

In this particular case, the distinguished Senator from Delaware is without peer with regard to these areas of the Judiciary Committee that he has managed here this evening. So, it is very difficult to argue with him in areas where his heart is right, his soul is right, and his writings and work have been equally right. It has been a privilege for me to be with him this evening, and I look forward to working with him in the future on other items as well as finishing this bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the Nation is at a critical turning point in the war on drugs. A winning strategy against drug abuse involves three approaches: Law enforcement, prevention, and treatment. Each is vital, and none can be downgraded or ignored.

In light of the severe budget constraints we face, the greatest challenge may well be to spread our limited resources in the most effective possible way. That is particularly so when it comes to law enforcement. We don't have the resources to apprehend or imprison every pusher, supplier or casual user. Our efforts over the past several years have already saddled us with a criminal justice system that is bursting at the seams, causing prosecutors, courts and prisons to call out for help.

On the enforcement side of the drug war, wiser policies and more resources are needed, especially at the State and local level—where the real war is fought every day on our streets and in our communities. We must learn to support our State and local police—and do it without abandoning fundamental constitutional guarantees or turning any local jurisdiction into a police state.

More important, Federal law enforcement officials must do a better job of coordinating Federal efforts, so that we direct drug enforcement resources in a way that brings maximum pressure on drug trafficking organizations here and abroad. This Democratic package improves on the law enforcement proposals put forth last month in Director Bennett's national drug strategy. But we can must do better.

Drug Director Bennett's proposals, with their emphasis on State and local enforcement and street crime crackdowns, reflect a positive step away from the misguided efforts of the previous administration to zero out Federal assistance to State and local law enforcement. The budget agreement arrived at last week improves further on this trend by allocating more funds to State and local law enforcement—where the real war is fought every day on our streets and in our communities.

The Democratic package reflects a balanced approach, particularly in its treatment of supply reduction programs and priorities. In particular, we have included enhancements in State and local law enforcement authority, tougher asset forfeiture, quicker prosecutors of drug offenders, broader use of civil sanctions, and high intensity drug trafficking and disaster area improvements.

The State and local law enforcement grant program provides Federal resources for a range of effective programs that should be encouraged. It requires State and local grant applications to certify that Federal grant funds will not be used to replace State and local funds that would otherwise be devoted to such law enforcement activities. We also encourages States to implement policies with proven success, including emphasis on swift and certain punishment, tough penalties that punish offenders and limit their ability to commit future crimes, and board asset forfeiture.

Our package includes language making Federal law enforcement grants to States dependent upon the presence and effective implementation of the following State and local programs: (1) Fast-track prosecution of drug offenders aimed at requiring sentencing within 100 days of arraignment; (2) broader remedial and punitive authority in the form of civil injunctive relief including stay-away orders; and, most important, (3) strong forfeiture priorities designed to seize drug profits and provide additional revenue for law enforcement, treatment and other drug-fighting programs.

The 1988 act gave the drug director specific authority that Senator BIDEN and I authored to designate certain areas as "high intensity drug areas." We left considerable discretion with the Director in exercising that authority. Our concept was intended to provide a mechanism for the Federal Government to bring greater pressure to bear on areas of the country hardest hit by the drug problem, in the same fashion that disaster areas are determined. The proposal we now consider gives full effect to the proposal Senator BIDEN and I first conceived last year.

A specific allocation of high intensity resource commitments was not specified, but the 1988 drug bill clearly set forth Congress' overall conclusion that 50:50 is the appropriate distribution between supply and demand resources. Because Director Bennett's national drug strategy does not accept that distribution, we have included criteria in the pending proposal to ensure that the "high intensity" and "disaster" designations take into account both supply and demand needs, so that relief to these areas will reflect the 50–50 formula.

In addition, our proposals will authorize up to $300 million for designated high intensity drug trafficking and disaster areas. Currently, the drug Director's authority is limited to reassigning existing resources and that authority is important. This new proposal will authorize the injection of new resources to high intensity areas, whether it is for supply or demand reduction programs, instead of taking away important resources from other assignments.

We have also included a provision to encourage Federal prosecutors to make broader use of civil injunctions, including stay-away orders to keep offenders out of drug trafficking areas and crack houses, and to use RICO's civil and forfeiture sanctions against all criminal offenders. Offenders who violate these civil orders would be subject to enhanced punishment at the discretion of the court.

Taken together, these provisions will provide substantial new assistance to all levels of our law enforcement and civil justice system, and I urge the Senate to support them.

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, in accordance with 22 U.S.C. 1928a-1928d, as amended, appoints the following Senators as members of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly Meeting during the 1st session of the 101st Congress, to be held in Rome, Italy, October 6-10, 1989: the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBB].

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for there to be a period for morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROBERT H. SWEENEY, NACHRI PRESIDENT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, earlier this year, I introduced S. 440, the Health Care for Children Act, to address the serious gaps in Medicaid coverage for poor children and pregnant women. I am hopeful that the Congress will act on the much needed reforms I have put forward in S. 440 as part of the fiscal year 1990 budget reconciliation act.

In drafting S. 440, I drew on the counsel of many child health advocates, including Robert H. Sweeney, the president of NACHRI—the National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions. During the past year, children's hospitals around the country have worked through NACHRI to call attention to the tremendous inadequacies of Medicaid coverage for children. More than half of all children living in families with incomes less than the Federal poverty level have not qualified for Medicaid nationwide, and in most States, Medicaid does not begin to meet the costs of providing health care for children.

Bob Sweeney is a native son of Delaware, and NACHRI made its home in Wilmington for many years before moving to the Washington, DC, area. I have valued Bob's advice and assistance over the years, and I take pleasure in joining his colleagues in congratulating him on the 15th anniversary of his service to NACHRI at a time when the association is holding its annual convention and the Nation is observing National Children's Day. I ask that the following statement of NACHRI's recognition of Bob Sweeney be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A TRIBUTE TO ROBERT H. SWEENEY

(By William H. Considine, NACHRI Chairman)

Some time ago, recognizing that we had both an obligation and a contribution to advance children's health and health policy in the broadest sense, the nation's children's hospitals decided to pool our collective expertise and resources by centralizing our efforts in Washington. In this way, we reasoned, we would be able to advocate for children all across the nation the way we were already advancing the health status of children in our own communities. And fifteen years ago we were fortunate enough to marry our collective mission to the vision of a dedicated child advocate: Robert H. Sweeney.

The years have proven the wisdom of these decisions. Over the course of the past fifteen years, children's hospitals and our association, NACHRI, have accomplished a great deal in the service of children. Let me share with you just a few of these important accomplishments:

In 1978, NACHRI published a major study documenting for the first time the uniqueness of children's hospitals, based on the unique needs of a child in treatment. This landmark study allowed those outside the health field to understand that children's hospitals commit a substantially greater percentage of resources to specialized intensive care than do general hospitals and that much of the staffing and other cost differences are inherent in the nature of the care needs of children with complex illnesses.

In 1985, NACHRI built upon this base of documented difference by researching and introducing PMDRGs, or Pediatric Modified Diagnostic Related Groups, which have allowed prospective payment systems to incorporate an understanding and respect for children's illnesses into their financial systems. This work has been the foundation of NACHRI's effective advocacy of reform of the CHAMPUS prospective payment system.

As this expertise has become more visible to our representatives in the Capitol, it has also become more vocal. NACHRI has emerged as a recognized leader in advocacy for children's health and as the center of a vast network of authorities in the field. The association has been instrumental in facilitating a fruitful dialogue between children's hospitals and the Congress through informed testimony.

NACHRI has also played a useful role in defending and promoting the public policy interests of all children as they relate to health. In 1988, NACHRI promoted a nonpartisan voter education campaign—"I Care for Kids—and I Vote!"—which the children's hospitals used all across the country to encourage voters and candidates alike to address the needs of children.

Over the years, NACHRI has developed an internal data base on children's hospitalization to enable hospitals themselves to manage better and to provide better care for children. As part of the growing professionalization of the organization, NACHRI has instituted educational forums to facilitate greater communication among various child health professionals.

In all of these accomplishments, Robert Sweeney has been a key component. The peculiar genius of this man comes, in part, I surmise, from his Irish roots. The poet Marianne Moore once summed up what it means to be an Irish-American, and her observation seems pertinent to Bob Sweeney. She said, "I'm toubled, I'm dissatisfied, I'm Irish." Under Bob Sweeney's leadership, NACHRI documented and released a major study that compared our children's health today to the way we had hoped it would be as we entered the next decade. It was a grim Profile of Child Health in the United States that NACHRI released last March; but it was an accurate measure of our nation's commitment to children. NACHRI shared these statistics with the nation and said, "We can do better than this. We must do better than this."

The hospitals which comprise NACHRI want to pay special tribute to Bob in his 15th anniversary year of service to children and their health care providers. We can do him no better honor than to quote a statement he made about the true strength and symbolism of our collective mission: "The children's hospital is, in and of itself, a statement of advocacy for the child. Its physical presence is a tangible, discernible message to the community that its children are important, that their health is important and that millions of dollars have been committed to that effort."

Today NACHRI has grown from its initial group of 25 to represent 100 prestigious institutions around the country. If the children's hospitals today stand as a beacon to this country of what children's health can become, it is because this powerful alliance of leadership and vision has stayed the course for the past fifteen years. We are all NACHRI's beneficiaries.

FURTHER MODIFICATION TO SENATE REPORT 101-75

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in order to expedite final action on the conference report on the fiscal year 1990 Interior and related agencies appropriation bill, I submit a further modification to the 302(b) allocation report of the Committee on Appropriations. The conference outcome on the Interior appropriation bill provides funding just below the budget authority and outlay levels of the House 302(b) allocations. This modification is made to conform the Committee allocation for the Interior Subcommittee to that of the House.

The Committee has allocated $300 million in budget authority and $80 million in outlays from savings to be made in the Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies appropriation bill to the Interior Subcommittee. In addition, the Committee has allocated $80 million in budget authority from savings made by the Energy and Water Development Subcommittees to the Interior Subcommittee.

On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit the following further modification to Senate Report 101-75 and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the modification was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

FURTHER MODIFIED ALLOCATIONS TO SUBCOMMITTEES—FURTHER MODIFICATION TO SENATE REPORT 101-75

IN MEMORIAM: ROGER HOWELL, JR.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, last week, my alma mater, Bowdoin College, in Brunswick, ME, lost one of its most distinguished leaders and accomplished teachers. Roger Howell, Jr., the school's 10th president and an internationally recognized historian, passed away at age 53.

Roger was a gifted educator who made his mark at Bowdoin at an early age. After graduating from the college Phi Beta Kappa, he won a Rhodes scholarship and went on to Oxford, where he received three degrees and served as a research fellow, tutor, and dean.

Roger returned to his alma mater at age 28, joining the history department as assistant professor and lecturing on his academic specialty, Tudor and Stuart England. Four years later, he became president of Bowdoin and thus one of the youngest college heads in the Nation.

Under his leadership, Bowdoin opened its doors to women students, expanded its enrollment, established Maine's first Afro-American center and developed a sophisticated computer center. He helped inaugurate an undergraduate exchange program with other leading Eastern liberal arts schools and maintained a balanced budget in the face of significant inflation.

Roger resigned from the presidency in 1978 to return to full-time teaching. He wrote eight books, edited two others, and founded a well-respected journal on British studies.

As a Bowdoin alumnus, parent, and former trustee, I can attest to Roger's major contributions to the Bowdoin community. His outstanding scholarship, passion for teaching, and love of his alma mater will be missed by all of us who care about Bowdoin.

While I am saddened by the loss of someone who still had so much to offer, I take comfort in the knowledge that Roger Howell had a remarkable career and made a lasting impression on countless students and teachers.

INVESTIGATION OF EASTERN AIRLINES DISPUTE

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the Senate is debating a proposal to establish a commission to investigate the ongoing labor dispute and the reorganization of Eastern Airlines. The commission would also be charged with making recommendations on a broad array of aviation policy matters.

I appreciate that this ongoing labor dispute has been very disruptive for all Eastern employees—and for a very long time. Labor negotiations have been going on for over 2 years now. It appears that they're farther apart today than ever before. The Machinists Union officially went on strike on March 4—6 months ago—and many pilots and flight attendants have since joined that effort. At that time, the President was asked to intervene and appoint an emergency mediation board to review the matter. The President chose not to intervene, Congress was asked to override the President's decision, and we did not. We have already reviewed this matter—we have already debated and voted this issue of congressional intervention into the dispute. But yet, because of an intense and well-orchestrated lobbying effort, we find ourselves here today, once again, discussing the issue of Federal involvement in a private labor dispute.

And today, the matter is even more complicated in that Eastern Airlines is in bankruptcy—its future is within the jurisdiction of our court system. Any recommended settlement that might come out of a commission for a blue-ribbon panel appointed by Congress is entirely inappropriate.

Now, I've heard the arguments that Texas Air is hiding in the courts, is ducking the issues. My goodness—if you call losing about 30 to 35 percent of one's business in the reorganization, but yet proposing to pay back $914 million of a $2.4 billion debt, having $774 million of cash at yearend, and employing about 17,000 jobs for union and nonunion employees ducking the issues—that's one man's opinion.

The National Mediation Board has expended hundreds of days to try to resolve this issue—long, dedicated days—but yet, this blue-ribbon panel is supposed to come up with a resolution in 45 days? I don't think it can happen. And I don't think Congress should be used like this to set up a panel that will be subject to political pressures—very subtle and very unspoken, but very present, nonetheless—when a national mediation board has already been involved. It just is not right. It's phony.

I am also very concerned that this three-member panel is going to be charged with making recommendations on all sorts of aviation policy matters—all within 45 days. Matters including airline competitiveness in light of mergers, acquisitions, and bankruptcies; the treatment of airline employees in bankruptcies; foreign ownership of air carriers; and the effects of air safety of hiring replacement workers during a strike. These are major policy questions that we can answer by utilizing a Department of Transportation which is chock full of qualified experts to answer. We don't need to appoint three-member panels to do it.

And it is not as if this Federal Government has not been keeping a very close eye on the Eastern situation. The Federal Aviation Administration has investigated Eastern's current maintenance and other safety practices, and will continue to do so. That is our responsibility—to see that the airline is safe. It is not our responsibility to get involved in the difficult labor dispute.

Can you imagine the floodgates that this would open? Do we want all of our Nation's industries which are renegotiating their labor contracts—and there are a lot of them—to know that if all doesn't go well, Congress will appoint a panel to rehear everything that has already been presented to mediators, arbitrators, and even the national mediation board? I certainly don't think so.

I do understand how difficult this labor dispute is. I understand and know the problems and frustrations on both sides. I have heard the allegations and the accusations—they are fierce and ugly and heartfelt. But, we in Congress, must not get into this one. It is not our place.

TARIFF LEGISLATION

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, today I am introducing three miscellaneous tariff bills. The first provides for the temporary suspension of duty on ioxaglate, which is a state-of-the-art diagnostic imaging agent used in cardiology and radiology. The second provides for an extension of the existing suspension of duty on triallate, which is the active technical ingredient of a commodity—nonpatented—selective, preemergent wild oat herbicide. Finally, the third bill provides for an extension of the existing suspension of duty on triphenyl phosphate, which is an additive used in the manufacture of certain plastics and other products.

I ask unanimous consent that the texts of these three bills be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. RIEGLE, and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 1718. A bill to clarify the rules under which the disabilities of children will be evaluated when applying for supplemental security income benefits, to require outreach to identify children who may be eligible for benefits under the program, and to make revisions in other rules applicable to children's eligibility for SSI; to the Committee on Finance.

SSI DISABLED CHILDREN'S ELIGIBILITY ACT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to improve supplemental security income [SSI] eligibility standards for poor disabled children. The bill would make clear that the Secretary of Health and Human Services is to perform the same kind of disability eligibility assessments for children as he does for adults.

The present regulatory system provides one set of eligibility criteria for adults and a more restrictive one for children. The Supreme Court will hear arguments this term that the regulatory system is inconsistent with the Social Security Act, under which a child is defined to be disabled by any medically determinable physical or mental impairment of comparable severity to one that would enable an adult to quality of disability benefits. I am pleased to say that New York is one of 28 States that have filed an amicus brief in support of the indigent disabled infants. But I think it desirable to clarify the matter legislatively, as well as related matters which I will come to presently.

Under the current system, a child will be found disabled only if his or her impairment is included in the regulatory listing of children's impairments or is found to be medically equal in severity to a listed impairment. But if an adult's impairment does not meet or equal the listing of adult impairments, the examiners will go on to assess the individual's functional ability to work, based on medical and functional factors. Thus, for adults the listing is not presumed to be an exhaustive means of determining disability, but for children it is.

The bill would require, for those children whose impairments do not meet or equal the listing, an assessment of the functional limits that interfere with the activities of daily living appropriate to the age of the child. This is a matter of simple fairness. Poor disabled children should have the benefit of the same kind of eligibility assessments available to disabled adults.

The bill would also require the Secretary to presume SSI disability eligibility for infants under age 4 who were born with congenital impairments that are likely to prove disabling when the children are old enough to be tested. Such impairments would include Down's syndrome, cystic fibrosis, and spina bifida. Currently, babies with such impairments in families living in poverty are denied benefits until they are old enough to be positively tested for disability. This is shocking to me, and I trust to most. This is a much needed change for the most vulnerable and needy group I can think of.

Further, the bill would require the Secretary to update the listing of children's impairments, which have not been revised since 1977. The current listing does reflect recent developments in medical technology, and does not even include AIDS among the disabling impairments for children.

Finally, the bill would require the Secretary to conduct an outreach program to inform low-income families with potentially eligible children about the existence of the SSI disability program. Studies consistently show that only about half of those eligible for SSI actually file for benefits, presumably because the other half does not know about the program. A simple information campaign could go a long way for these individuals in need.

Mr. President, I think all will agree the provisions are targeted to assist a very needy group. For the information of Senators, similar provisions are included in the House reconciliation bill, so we have an opportunity to do something on this very important legislation still this year. I urge the favorable consideration of my colleagues.●

By Mr. McCONNELL:

S. 1720. A bill to impose mandatory sentences for violent felonies committed against individuals of age 65 or over, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MANDATORY SENTENCES FOR CRIMES AGAINST THE ELDERLY

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to protect our Nation's elderly citizens from violent crime.

Quite simply, my bill would ensure a tough minimum sentence for anyone who commits a violent felony against a person aged 65 years or over. It would require the court to give the offender at least half the maximum sentence provided by law, for any first offender; and at least three-quarters the maximum sentence for a repeat offender.

Under my bill, the cowardly criminal who brutalizes a senior citizen would be put away for a long time, and would not be able to get out through some legal sleight-of-hand: no probationary sentence, no suspended sentence, no concurrent sentence, no plea bargaining, and no parole. Nor would the offender be eligible for any "play-prison" alternatives, such as home incarceration.

More than 1 out of every 200 senior citizens is the victim of a violent crime each year. That makes a total of 155,000 elderly Americans who are attacked, robbed, assaulted, and murdered every year—435 each day.

The elderly also are vulnerable targets for muggings, purse-snatchings, and hold-ups. In 1987 alone, 527,000 senior citizens were victims of personal thefts. A few years ago, hoodlums would lurk like vultures in older citizens' neighborhoods, waiting for the Social Security checks to come in. As a result, those checks are now sent out, staggered throughout the month, to foil those who prey on our most treasured and vulnerable citizens.

Today, drug criminals prowl the streets, hungry for money to buy their next fix. Senior citizens are choice targets for these addicts: older people save carefully; they usually keep a little cash around; and they don't pose a threat to a cowardly criminal.

As our streets become more dangerous and criminals become more desperate, older Americans increasingly will be the targets of vicious crimes.

Already, in some of cities, the elderly are becoming an endangered species.

We need to stand up now in defense of the generation that preceded us. Our parents and grandparents tried to provide us a safe world to grow up in; we must try our best to do the same for them.

The bill I am introducing today will put the criminal world on notice that we will not tolerate violence against any person, least of all someone who is elderly, probably on a fixed income, and less able to fight back or run away. For older victims of crime, a violent attack can mean serious injuries—both physical and psychological—that never heal. It can mean the instant loss of a lifetime of savings; and it can tragically shorten the life of a robust older person who is in the prime of life.

I hope my colleagues will join me in ensuring that justice is done for those victims of violent crime, and that criminals are effectively deterred from such cowardly, reprehensible acts.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 1721. A bill to amend title XVI of the Social Security Act to provide that a blind or disabled child otherwise qualified may be eligible for SSI benefits even though not a resident of the United States, if such child is accompanying a parent who is a member of the Armed Forces serving a tour of duty overseas; to the Committee on Finance.

SSI BENEFITS FOR CHILDREN RESIDING OVERSEAS

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill that is intended to help a small but important group of people. These people are our men and women in the military, specifically those military families who have children who are blind or disabled.

Families with blind or disabled children are eligible, under the Social Security Act, for what are called supplemental security income benefits. These benefits are meant to help families who must shoulder the severe costs associated with therapy and medical care for their disabled dependents. Through an unfair quirk in the Social Security Act, however, military families lose these benefits when they are stationed overseas. In fact, many of these families were unaware that they would lose these benefits once they leave the United States. According to the current law, families with disabled dependents would be eligible only if they reside in the United States.

In July, during consideration of the Department of Defense authorization bill, I introduced an amendment that would require the Pentagon to provide a study of the number of military families eligible for SSI benefits, how many lose these benefits each year when they are stationed overseas, and what the DOD could do to compensate these families for the benefits they need and deserve.

I was happy to hear that, simultaneously, Congressman SLATTERY in the other body was also working on this issue. He had introduced similar legislation to amend the Social Security Act in order to provide these families with these benefits.

During the course of reviewing his legislation, the House Ways and Means Committee received the information I had requested in my amendment. There are approximately 200 military families affected by their loss of benefits each year. The cost of providing these benefits would be nominal—roughly $500,000 per year. The bill was then approved and included in the House reconciliation bill.

My bill follows closely the language that is currently in the House reconciliation bill. It amends the Social Security Act to provide these benefits to military families so that they are not overburdened by the high costs of medical and therapeutic care for the disabled.

It is a good and fair bill. No family should be subjected with the hard choice of either traveling overseas and losing their needed benefits, or of splitting up the family for a year or more while one spouse is deployed in the military overseas and the other spouse remains in the United States with the disabled child in order to retain the needed benefits. Today, military life is already challenging enough; let's not make it more difficult by making them choose between SSI benefits and family unity.

I hope the Senate and the Congress will agree with me and Congressman SLATTERY. This bill costs so little but can go a long way to maintaining the morale and unity of the military family. I urge the Senate to approve this important piece of legislation.●

S. 1722. A bill to establish in the Environmental Protection Agency a Long Island Sound Office, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

LONG ISLAND SOUND IMPROVEMENT ACT

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1989. I am very pleased that Senators MOYNIHAN, DODD, and D'AMATO join me as original cosponsors of this bill.

Long Island Sound is a resource of tremendous importance to both Connecticut and New York. Nearly 10 percent of the population of the United States lives within 50 miles of Long Island Sound; its watershed reaches to Canada.

There are 200,000 small boats registered Sound-wide and an estimated three quarters of a million sports fishermen provide between $70 and $130 million to the regional economy. Connecticut's largest beaches welcome more than 2.5 million visitors each year. Long Island Sound supports a $40 million commercial fishery, while 20 million tons of cargo pass through Connecticut's major ports each year. Five and a half billion gallons of oil transit Long Island Sound yearly.

But Long Island Sound is not merely a vehicle for recreation or commerce, it has been named by the Federal Government as an estuary of national significance and hosts the Stewart B. McKinney National Wildlife Refuge—within 50 miles of New York City.

Unfortunately, Long Island Sound is also a dumping ground—for our sewage wastes, our agricultural and urban runoff, and for the sometimes toxic byproducts of industry. In spots, excess nutrients like nitrogen and phosphorous work on the algae like fertilizer on a lawn, and the fish, already fighting the effects of dangerous toxics, must now fight the algae for available oxygen.

In 1985, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency initiated the Long Island Sound study to address these problems. By 1991, it will have produced a comprehensive conservation and management plan. The plan will be based on complex and sophisticated modeling efforts by USEPA and NOAA designed to recreate the water quality and water circulation of Long Island Sound. And while these efforts and the study's focus on the hypoxic conditions I've just described are important and exciting, the study has also exposed new and critical needs which must be addressed: the level of contamination in Long Island Sound's sediments, the role tidal wetlands play as nature's filter for pollutants and whether enough of them are preserved, the preparedness of the region to adequately respond to a significant oil or toxics spill, to name just a few.

In addition, according to a recent article in the New York Times, there are nearly 150 village, town, city, county, State, and Federal jurisdictions involved in the management of Long Island Sound. Clearly, a formal mechanism of cooperation is needed in order to effectively implement the management plan of the Long Island Sound study. While this bill mandates a continued study to thoroughly address the issues raised earlier, it also provides the means of coordination necessary to clean up the only estuary in the country subject to the oversight of two regions of the USEPA and to the laws and the pollution of two States.

The Long Island Sound Improvement Act will ensure the implementation of the management plan. It maintains the involvement of the Federal Government by creating a Long Island Sound Program office with the US EPA. It guarantees the continued involvement of the States of Connecticut and New York by directing the Administrator of the USEPA to continue the Long Island Sound study. And it provides for cooperation between the States and the Federal Government by creating a liaison committee comprised of State and EPA representatives to advise the Long Island Sound program office director.

The Long Island Sound program office will make regular enforcement and compliance reports public. It is authorized to receive $3 million a year to carry out these and other projects not covered by the study. The current Long Island Sound study will continue at its yearly authorization from the USEPA of approximately $1.7 million a year, through 1991.

In addition, this legislation creates the Long Island Sound fund by directing the U.S. Treasury to transfer to it an amount equal to that collected as a result of Federal and citizen suits against polluters of Long Island Sound. This fund will further support the projects necessary to implement, enforce, and maintain the cleanup of Long Island Sound.

In conclusion, Mr. President, this legislation recognizes the important work already done by the Long Island Sound study, and it builds upon it. It creates a central office to coordinate Government efforts to restore a vital resource by enabling and helping to implement a management plan which is dynamic and thorough, as one far-reaching and close to home.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1722

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. EXTENSION OF MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE FOR LONG ISLAND SOUND.

(a) EXTENSION OF MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE.—Notwithstanding section 320(e) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (commonly referred to as the "Clean Water Act") (33 U.S.C. 1330(e)), the Administrator shall extend the management conference of the Long Island Sound conducted under such section after the date of termination of the initial period of such management conference for a period of time from the date of such termination until September 30, 1998, for the purposes indicated under section 320(b) of such Act (33 U.S.C. 1330(b)), making modifications to the management plan developed under such section 320(b), and for any additional purposes described in this Act.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, it is with great enthusiasm that I join with Senators LIEBERMAN, DODD, and D'AMATO in sponsoring the Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1989.

As you know, our two States have worked together on improvements to the quality of the Long Island Sound. This included legislation to create the Long Island Sound study. The Long Island Sound Improvement Act is a good next step and I am pleased to be part of the effort. The Long Island Sound study has made significant strides in identifying and understanding the source of pollution in the sound. The work of the study will continue, as it should, and will guide the efforts of the interstate management conference established by our bill.

Mr. Chairman, Connecticut and New York share many things. We are bound together by, among other things, the Long Island Sound. It is our border, and our common patrimony. With over one hundred town and villages on its shores, the Long Island Sound serves both for leisure and as a place of work. It is the purpose of the Long Island Sound study to find ways to improve the health of this body of water. It will now be the purpose of our legislation to put these ideas to work. This must be done.

The States of New York and Connecticut have done much by themselves to help the sound. As has the EPA. But the Federal commitment must not end when the study is done. The EPA must help implement the findings of the study. Experience has shown that the type of program we are advocating works. It has helped in the Chesapeake Bay and the Great Lakes. These programs have had their problems and our legislation tries to solve some of them.●

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Connecticut, Senator LIEBERMAN, in introducing the Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1989.

The Long Island Sound truly is one of Connecticut's and the region's natural treasures. To the more than 15 million people who live within 50 miles of the shores of Long Island Sound, it is a popular recreational area for boating, swimming, and sport fishing. Long Island Sound also supports an active commercial fishing industry generating approximately $20 million annually.

Many of these recreational and commercial activities depend on a clean sound, but the blue waters of the sound are not as clean as they may look. Rapid population growth in the Long Island Sound watershed has lead to increased threats to the environment. According to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, 86 sewage treatment plants release more than a billion gallons of wastewater into the sound each day. Indirect and direct industrial discharges, combined sewer overflows, urban stormwater runoff, and agricultural and construction runoff also contribute to the pollution loads.

Is Long Island Sound in trouble? To provide the answer and respond to concern about the health of such coastal environments, Congress asked the Environmental Protection Agency to establish a national estuary program to improve the environmental quality of the Nation's most important estuaries. Because the valuable resources of Long Island Sound are being threatened by overuse and pollution, this estuary was one of the first four to be included in the program, and in March 1988, the sound was designated as an estuary of national significance.

The Long Island Sound study is a 6-year project involving Federal, State, interstate, and local agencies, universities, environmental groups, industry, and the general public. These groups have been working together since 1985 to identify the major environmental problems of the sound and to develop a plan by 1991 to manage those problems.

Last year, the study turned toward defining a framework for the Long Island Sound management plan. The plan will address the predominant problems facing the sound, namely hypoxia (low dissolved oxygen), toxic contamination, and the health of the sound's fish and shellfish. In addition, the plan will make recommendations about the control of pathogens and floatable debris in the sound's waters.

When the Long Island Sound study ends in 1991, we will be left with a plan of action. We need to ensure that the plan is followed. The "Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1989" is a comprehensive and ambitious plan to provide for continued emphasis on Long Island Sound issues after completion of the study.

The bill provides for focused and sustained Federal involvement, including funding, in Long Island Sound issues through the creation of a Long Island Sound Office at EPA. The office would oversee implementation of the management plan, establish liaison with the heads of all Federal agencies and departments which have jurisdiction over Long Island Sound issues, make grants to the States to implement the sound study management plans, and be responsible for a series of critical new studies which are not part of the current study. The office would consist of representatives of both EPA regional offices with jurisdiction over the sound.

With the necessary policymaking authority, the office would serve as an impetus for post-study Federal involvement which might not otherwise occur in an agency with other competing demands and limited resources. I am confident that creation of the Long Island Sound Office would allow us to build upon the many positive results of the Long Island Sound study.

The challenge before us is for a coordinated, dedicated effort at all levels of government—local, State, and Federal—to revive, protect and preserve this precious natural resource, the Long Island Sound. While we are all mindful of the cost of the solution, it pales in comparison to the cost in terms of lost recreational facilities, marine related industry, and the overall quality of life in the region that we wish to maintain and preserve for future generations.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President I join today with my distinguished colleagues Senators LIEBERMAN, MOYNIHAN, and DODD in introducing the Long Island Sound Improvement Act of 1989.

The quality of life on Long Island is so dependent upon its coastal waters—especially the Long Island Sound. Approximately 5 million people live within 15 miles of the sound's shoreline. Year round, the sound attracts thousands of citizens for fishing, boating and swimming. In 1988, the sound was recognized as one of this country's most important natural resources by its inclusion in EPA's National Estuary Program.

In 1985 I was one of the key players in initiating the Long Island Sound study. The goal of the study is to identify and understand the sources of pollution in the sound and ultimately produce a comprehensive conservation and management plan which both New York and Connecticut have agreed to implement. While the study has been successful in determining that hypoxia is a major problem in the sound, limited resources have prevented in-depth investigation into the toxics problems. The legislation we are introducing today will help to override that shortcoming.

The Long Island Sound Improvement Act will create an office within the Environmental Protection Agency called the Long Island Sound Program Office which will oversee the sound's management plan. The new office will be located on or near the sound, alternating between New York and Connecticut every 5 years. Its director will be appointed by the EPA Administrator.

One of the most important duties of the Director will be to undertake a series of studies on: First, a 20-year growth assessment of the adequacy of wastewater treatment facilities along the sound to handle increases in population; second, nonpoint source pollution; third, shellfish health; fourth, recreational uses; and fifth, the establishment of an oilspill contingency plan.

I am delighted to be a cosponsor of this comprehensive piece of legislation which will greatly enhance the quality of the Long Island Sound. I look forward to working with my colleagues in moving this bill through Congress.●

Whereas the science of global environmental studies is expanding dramatically both in academic stature and in political importance;

Whereas the findings of environmental scientists in areas such as stratospheric ozone depletion, the greenhouse effect, deforestation, and acid rain are already leading to a profound change in public consciousness and in the agendas of all governments;

Whereas the work of these outstanding individuals should be recognized on a global scale, not only to reward their accomplishments, but to increase worldwide awareness of the environmental peril and underscore the urgency of environmental protection; and

Whereas humankind's pursuit of progress in the sciences, literature, economics, and world peace will falter if we do not also work to save the planet on which we live: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States urges the Nobel Commission to consider awarding Nobel Prize recognition for achievements in preservation of the world environment. Such a prize would recognize outstanding individuals who have made signal contributions to our awareness of and responsibility for the environment.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

NATIONAL AMERICAN INDIAN MUSEUM ACT

INOUYE AMENDMENT NO. 911

Mr. INOUYE proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 978) to authorize the establishment within the Smithsonian Institution of the National Museum of the American Indian, to establish a memorial to the American Indian, and for other purposes, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "National American Indian Museum Act".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) there is no national museum devoted exclusively to the history and art of cultures indigenous to the Americas, specifically Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts;

(2) although the Smithsonian Institution employs more than 6,000 people, operates 19 museums, galleries, and major research facilities, and sponsors extensive American Indian programs, none of its institutions are devoted exclusively to Native American art and history;

(3) the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, located in New York City, has an unequaled assemblage of more than 1,000,000 Indian art objects and artifacts and is one of the largest of such collections in the world;

(4) the library of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, houses 40,000 volumes relating to the archaeology, ethnology, and history of Native American peoples;

(5) the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, of art, artifacts, specimens and books is inadequately housed in 3 separate facilities totaling 90,000 square feet, with 95 percent of the collection of art and artifacts stored in 20,000 square feet and the collection of books kept in a 15,000 square foot library;

(6) the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation needs a minimum of 400,000 square feet to adequately exhibit and store art and artifacts and to provide space for scholars and researchers;

(7) the bringing together of the collection of the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, and the Native American collection of the Smithsonian Institution would—

(A) create an institution whose capabilities for exhibition and research would be unrivaled in scope and would give all Americans the opportunity to learn of the cultural legacy, historic grandeur, and contemporary culture of Indians; and

(B) provide—

(i) a meeting place for scholars,

(ii) a significant, national facility for the exhibition of Indian art and artifacts,

(iii) a stage for the performing arts,

(iv) curation and other learning opportunities for Indians, and

(v) traveling exhibitions to communities throughout the Nation;

(8) approximately 300 human remains of Indians collected from battlefields and burial grounds were sent to the Army Medical Museum by order of the Surgeon General of the United States Army and later transferred to the Smithsonian Institution where they are still stored;

(9) the Smithsonian Institution has acquired additional collections of Native American human remains through—

(A) archaeological excavations, and

(B) donations from individuals and museums;

(10) these collections have been estimated to contain the remains of approximately 18,000 Indians, Eskimos, Aleuts, and Native Hawaiians and the existence of these collections has concerned many Indian tribes and bands, Alaska Native villages, and Native Hawaiian families that are determined to provide an appropriate resting place for their ancestors;

(11) identifying the geographic and tribal origins of Indian and Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian human remains in the Smithsonian collections is essential to addressing these concerns; and

(12) an extraordinary site on the National Mall in the District of Columbia (U.S. Government Reservation No. 6) which has been reserved for the use of the Smithsonian Institution is available for construction of a suitable building to permanently house the collection of the National Museum of the American Indian.
